

Margaret Carnegie Library

MILLS COLLEGE COLLECTION

WITHDRAWN

MAPHAEUS VEGIUS AND HIS THIRTEENTH BOOK OF THE AENEID

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2023 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

https://archive.org/details/bwb_W7-BOW-971

MAPHAEUS VEGIUS AND HIS THIRTEENTH BOOK OF THE AENEID

A CHAPTER ON VIRGIL IN THE RE-NAISSANCE BY ANNA COX BRINTON
PROFESSOR OF ARCHAEOLOGY AT MILLS COLLEGE, CALIFORNIA

STANFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
STANFORD UNIVERSITY, CALIFORNIA

LONDON: HUMPHREY MILFORD
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

COPYRIGHT 1930 BY THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES
OF THE LELAND STANFORD JUNIOR UNIVERSITY
ALL RIGHTS RESERVED ~ PUBLISHED 1930 PRINTED AND BOUND IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA BY THE STANFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

PREFACE

The present vivid interest in Italian humanism, and that perennial admiration for Virgil which makes his scholars in the twentieth century no strangers to his lovers in the fifteenth, prompts the publication of this study of the most famous and most widely read sequel to the Aeneid.

The answers to the two questions "Why was 'The Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid' written?" and "Why was it read and enjoyed all over Europe for more than two hundred years?" throw light on Virgil's spiritual sway over European thought. This hitherto unwritten chapter is presented as a contribution to the history of Virgil's influence at the two-thousandth anniversary of his birth, when all the world is preparing to make grateful acknowledgment of the legacy of light and leading of this best-beloved of Roman poets.

Interpretation of the Aeneid is a barometer which registers changes in the thought-climate of Western civilization. The Middle Ages knew Virgil as a man of mystery, a magician; modern scholarship analyzes him as artist and philosopher; but the Renaissance adored him as author of a divine allegory, a pilgrim's progress of heroic souls. To Christian enthusiasm in the fifteenth century, accustomed as it was to the dogma of resurrection and to the canonization of saints, the Aeneid stopped short of a final emphatic statement of its glorious climax. Maphaeus Vegius' "Thirteenth Book" was the audacious effort of ardent youth to bring Virgil's narrative to its own sublime conclusion. The pleasant Virgilian cadences of the young Italian poet who followed his ancient master "non passibus aequis," but with love, awakened a subtle sympathy from readers in many lands to whom the world-transforming invention of the printing-press brought the Aeneid as well as the Bible. More than one hundred and eighty editions of Virgil appeared before 1500, that is, within the first fifty years after the introduction of the art of printing. The following century was almost as prolific of new editions. Until about 1650, Vegius' "Supplement" usually accompanied the Aeneid.

Maphaeus Vegius' "Thirteenth Book" claims as its editio princeps the Virgil of 1471, published in Venice by Adam de Ambergau. Of this small and rare edition Copinger has been able to identify only four copies. I have followed this text throughout. The spelling has been modified to conform to modern usage. The punctuation is my own. The beautiful round Roman types of the handsome Venetian original are illustrated by a photograph of the opening lines of the poem. This facsimile and the series of Sebastian Brant's spirited woodcuts (Strassburg, 1502) which illustrate the text were photographed in the British Museum.

The quaint English version with its terse insets, which is printed on alternate pages with the Latin text, is by Thomas Twyne, M.D., who completed the Virgil left unfinished by Dr. Thomas Phaer at his death in 1560. The Whole XIII Bookes of the Aeneidos of Virgil by Twyne and Phaer was first published in London in 1584. The facsimile title page photographed by the Henry E. Huntington Library appears following page 50.

Bishop Gavin Douglas' Scotch translation follows. It is introduced by a whimsical and delightful "Proloug of the Threttene Buik of Eneados ekit to Virgill be Mapheus Vegius." The XIII Bukes of Eneados of the famos poete Virgill translatet out of Latyne verses into Scottish metir, bi the Reverend Father in God, Mayster Gawin Douglas Bishop of Dunkel and unkil to the Erle of Angus, Euery buke hauing hys perticular Prologe was completed in 1513. Its earliest publication is dated London, 1553. This translation has special significance because it is the most important literary monument of ancient Scottish speech.

Two biographical and critical monographs, printed at Lodi in Lombardy in 1896 and 1909, respectively, supply valuable summaries of the life and work of Vegius. They are entitled La vita di Maffeo Vegio, unamista lodigiano, by Mario Minoia, and Maffeo Vegio, by Luigi Raffaele. The profile of Maphaeus Vegius which appears on the cover of this volume is adapted from a portrait in the town library of Lodi, published on page 76 of the latter. Liverani's edition of the "Thirteenth Book," Livorno, 1897, has also been of service.

Obligations to standard works are recorded in the notes.

I wish to express my thanks to the professors of Classical Literature at Stanford University, H. Rushton Fairclough, Augustus T. Murray, B. O. Foster, and Jefferson Elmore, who, as teachers, colleagues, and friends have aided my study. Professor Fairclough has taken especial interest in the present monograph on account of his own devotion to Virgil. Professor Foster made helpful suggestions in the early stages of this work. Miss Flora B. Ludington of the staff of the Mills College Library has given useful counsel in regard to bibliographical references.

ANNA COX BRINTON

MILLS COLLEGE
January 30, 1930

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	I
"THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF THE AENEID" AND VIRGIL'S CONTINUATORS.	I
MAPHAEUS VEGIUS, POET AND ESSAYIST	5
"THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF THE AENEID": THE ALLEGORIZERS	24
VIRGIL'S GREATEST ILLUSTRATOR AND "THE THIR- TEENTH BOOK"	40
TEXT OF THE "EDITIO PRINCEPS" } WITH THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION } BY THOMAS TWYNE, M.D., 1584 }	PARALLEL PAGES 52-91
TEXT OF THE SCOTCH TRANSLATION OF BOOK XIII BY GAVIN DOUGLAS	93-142
BIBLIOGRAPHY	143
WRITINGS OF MAPHAEUS VEGIUS	145
LIST OF THE MORE IMPORTANT WORKS CONSULTED.	146
COMMENTARY	151
NOTES.	153
PARALLEL PASSAGES: QUOTATIONS, ADAPTATIONS, REMINISCENCES OF VIRGIL AND OVID IN "THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF THE AENEID"	158
INDEX	177

ILLUSTRATIONS

WEDDING FEAST OF AENEAS AND LAVINIA	Frontispiece
The fifth woodcut in Sebastian Brant's series of six illustrating Vegius' "Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid " of the Virgil of 1502
AENEAS TRIUMPHANT	facing page 30
Brant's first woodcut illustrating the "Thirteenth Book"
THE FUNERAL OF TURNUS	facing page 40
Brant's second woodcut for the "Thirteenth Book"
EMBASSY TO AENEAS	facing page 42
Brant's third woodcut for the "Thirteenth Book"
MARRIAGE OF AENEAS	facing page 44
Brant's fourth woodcut illustrating the "Thirteenth Book"
DEATH OF AENEAS	facing page 48
Brant's sixth woodcut illustrating the "Thirteenth Book"
FACSIMILE OF THE TITLE-PAGE OF THE ENGLISH VERSION	facing page 50
Facsimile of the title-page from the English translation of Vegius' "Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid " by Thomas Twyne, M.D., London, 1584
FACSIMILE OF THE OPENING LINES OF THE "THIRTEENTH BOOK"	on page 92
Facsimile of the opening lines from Adam de Ambergau's Virgil , Venice, 1471

INTRODUCTION

"THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF THE AENEID" AND VIRGIL'S CONTINUATORS

Comparetti's magic tale of Virgil in the Middle Ages¹ describes the metamorphosis of the exponent of Rome's imperial ideal into a wizard of popular legend and traces his gradual literary transformation into the prophetic guide of Christian souls. This astonishing narrative will some day be followed by the no less romantic story of Virgil in the Renaissance. The ascendancy of the Aeneid was long and brilliant, for Virgil was, in a unique sense, master and model of all epic poets from Petrarch to Milton.

A delightful and almost fantastic chapter in the romance of Virgil's influence concerns Maphaeus Vegius' "Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid," a canto of six hundred and thirty lines, written at Pavia in 1428 by a lad of twenty-one. This audacious composition early had the strange fortune, as the piquant Virgilian critic, Dr. Henry, aptly puts it, to become "established as an eke or co-tenant under the same roof with the Aeneid,"² where it remained an almost constant resident for a century and a half after the invention of printing. Later it became, as it were, a visitor, and, in the eighteenth century, only an occasional guest in Virgil's house. Its final appearance at the close of the Aeneid occurred in Lemaire's Bibliotheca classica, Paris, 1820.

As early as 1500 Iodocus Badius Ascensius had enriched Maphaeus Vegius' "Thirteenth Book" with a copious commentary. Two years later Sebastian Brant embellished it with six inimitable woodcuts. It was many times translated, and in the eighteenth century it was even parodied.

Maphaeus Vegius was not alone in his aspiration to complete the tale of Aeneas' fortunes.³ Pier Candido Decembrio, the illustrious translator of Appian and Plato, whose features are pictured for posterity in Pisanello's distinguished medallion, also ventured in his youth to compose a supplement to the Aeneid, but he says that he laid the manuscript away among his papers and did not give it to the world. It has, however, survived, at least in part, and a considerable passage is quoted by Saxius in his laborious chronicle of the literature of Milan.⁴

¹ D. Comparetti, Virgil in the Middle Ages, translated by E. F. M. Benecke, London, 1895.

² J. Henry, Aeneidea (Dublin, 1878), I, Introduction, page 60.

³ See: (1) Vierteljahrsschrift für Kultur und Litteratur der Renaissance, Berlin, 1886; (2) C. Borinski, Das Epos der Renaissance; (3) Giornale Storico della letteratura italiana (1885), VI, 472.

In 1483 the anonymous author of the "Analysis of the Aeneid" wrote a continuation to Virgil's Twelfth Book. Joseph Forestus⁵ and C. S. de Novavilla,⁶ in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, respectively, devised additional conclusions to the epic. In the nineteenth century an English translator of Virgil named Seymour Burt,⁷ not satisfied with translating Vegius' supplement, even had the temerity to propose a fourteenth book evolved from the early chapters of Livy's history. So far afield had his admirers strayed from a true understanding of the structural completeness of Virgil's epic and a just appreciation of its tragic close.

Maphaeus Vegius' "Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid" was the only one of these sequels which became famous. To Vegius, Virgil's epic was above all an allegory of the soul. For this reason he could ill spare what was to him the climax of its narrative—the crossing of the river where the mortal garment was left behind and the swift ascent through regions of air to a place of glory among the stars. Aeneas' westward voyage, his war in Italy, his marriage, and his apotheosis all lent themselves to symbolic interpretation.

Vegius' "Thirteenth Book" opens with the same dramatic picture with which Virgil's twelfth book closes. It proceeds to relate how Aeneas, now master of Italy, since he has slain Turnus in single combat, receives the Rutuli in surrender. The captains strike their

⁴ J. A. Saxius, Historia literaria typographica mediolanensis, Milan, 1745; also Giornale storico della letteratura italiana (1893), XXII, 433.

⁵ Virgilius, edited by C. G. Heyne, supplemented by N. E. Lemaire (Paris, 1820), pages 408 ff.

⁶ C. S. de Novavilla or Villanova, Supplementum ad Aeneida seu Aeneidos liber decimus tertius, Paris, 1698.

⁷ See below, page 39.

spears into the earth and lay down their shields. Though stricken with grief, they prefer submission to further struggle. Meanwhile the Trojans bury their dead and make sacrifice to the gods. Aeneas exhorts his comrades to continued perseverance. The Latins lament their hero Turnus, whose body is sent home by night with a stately funeral train. When the sad procession reaches Ardea, the city is in flames, and old king Daunus, beset with harrowing grief at home, is confronted with the loss of his only son in war. In the midst of all this sorrow heaped on sorrow, the spirit of the ancient city of Ardea, in the form of the bird Ardea, rises Phoenix-like from the burning embers. On the following day Latinus sends an embassy to Aeneas confirming peace and promising his daughter in marriage. Aeneas and the Trojans journey to Laurentum with pomp and circumstance. The kings meet, Lavinia is betrothed, and rich Trojan gifts are bestowed upon Latinus and his daughter. After nine days of dancing, feasting, and rehearsing adventures, Aeneas marks out his new city with the plow. A flame of fire like a saint's aureole glows about the bride Lavinia's brow, and blessed Venus appears to confirm and expound the omen. Latinus finishes his days and goes to his reward. Aeneas rules on in holy peace for the space of three years. Finally, by Jupiter's decree, his spirit is translated to the stars.

Vegius' style is fluent and easy; his language and meter are characteristic of the early quattrocento, when eloquence was more highly prized and more enthusiastically cultivated than accurate adherence to the literary canons of Augustan Rome. He did not revise his juvenilia in later life as "good old Mantuan"⁸ revised his famous Eclogues, but preferred to have his reputation rest upon more serious and mature prose works. His heroic poems, all of which were composed during his early years, show the faults as well as the freshness of youth eager to emulate great poets.⁹ The words and phrases of his master, Maro, whom he revered as a god upon earth,¹⁰ were always ringing in his ears, and it was second nature for Vegius to infuse Virgilian cadences into his own verse. This he did by adaptation and allusion rather than by the method of direct transference which characterizes the true cento, that "pseudo poetry—which pleases the learned by its ingenuity and deceives the unlearned by its affected stateliness."¹¹

⁸ W. P. Mustard, Eclogues of Mantuan, Baltimore (1911), page 35.

⁹ Maphaeus Vegius, Astyanax, Pavia, 1430; Velleris aurei libri quattuor, Pavia, 1431.

¹⁰ Maphaeus Vegius, De perseverantia religionis, I, 1: "Quem alterum in terris Deum esse arbitrabar."

The "Thirteenth Book" is shorter by seventy-five lines than Book IV, which is the shortest book of the Aeneid. It contains eight similes, an average number for the same number of lines in Virgil. Julius Caesar Scaliger writes in his Poetices, which is one of the first modern attempts at a systematic treatment of poetry and poets, that, in his opinion, the first two similes of Vegius are as good or better than those of Lucan and Statius.¹² The imitative element is less pronounced in Vegius' figures than in his narrative. The second simile is, however, composed entirely upon a Virgilian model. The first and fifth show Virgil's influence, though in each the point of comparison is different from his. The other five have only a faint resemblance to similes in the Aeneid. The last portrays a characteristically Italian agricultural scene in which peasants who have been housebound by a siege of rain are rejoicing in the return of fair weather. The description is well expressed and has real poetic merit.

The greatest flaw in the composition of the "Thirteenth Book" is an excess of speeches; these were introduced, no doubt, to increase dramatic effectiveness, but they far overshoot their mark. There are no less than thirteen harangues, laments, addresses, appeals, and prayers, ranging in length from four to forty-two lines. An age in which public eloquence was prized above every other literary accomplishment fell naturally into this error of taste.

The plot is based on the latter half of the Aeneid, with hints from the early chapters of Livy's history. Two conspicuous episodes, the burning of Ardea and the death of Aeneas, are adapted from the Metamorphoses of Ovid.¹³

¹¹ James Rendell Harris, The Homeric Centones and the Acts of Pilate, London, 1898.

¹² J. C. Scaliger, Poetices libri septem (Heidelberg, 1581, second edition), page 783.

¹³ Metamorphoses, XIV, 573–581, 581–608.

His own contemporaries were Vegius' enthusiastic admirers. The facility and youthful high spirit of his verse and his frank appropriation of the measures and phrases of the idolized ancients made him a general favorite. Quattrocentists found no inappropriateness in applying to him epithets such as "alter Maro"¹⁴ and "alter Parthenias"¹⁵ and the adjectives "doctissimus"¹⁶ and "altiloquus."¹⁷

MAPHAEUS VEGIUS, POET AND ESSAYIST

Maphaeus Vegius was born in the Lombard town of Lodi in 1407,¹⁸ the very year in which his more famous friend, the learned and audacious critic, Lorenzo Valla, was born in Rome; and he died at Rome in 1458, one year after Valla's death. His life covered a brilliant half-century in which Italy set the intellectual pace for Western Europe. Party strife no longer engrossed the entire attention of able men, and flourishing trade brought wealth and a standard of living favorable to the arts. The Papacy became permanently re-established in Rome after the vicissitudes of the "Babylonian Captivity"; the "Great Schism" came to an end; important cosmopolitan councils, which brought Eastern and Western Christendom together, definitely increased the prestige of the Roman See. City tyrants and princes of the Church vied with one another as patrons of art and of the scholarly industry that was unearthing legacies from antiquity. Literature had, since Petrarch, passed to its autumn, a season of erudition and research; but the plastic and pictorial arts were in the heyday of springtime. The early decades of the century witnessed the spiritual quickening of the Franciscan Revival and of its northern counterpart, the mission of John Huss. Travel and exploration were rapidly revising Ptolemaic conceptions of geography. Among all the varied achievements of this exuberant

¹⁴ G. Mancini, Lorenzo Valla (Florence, 1891), page 48.

¹⁵ Arundel Manuscripts 82 and 193, British Museum.

¹⁶ Antonio d'Asti, In rerum italicarum scriptores, XIV, 1013.

¹⁷ Carmina poetarum italorum, VII, 519.

¹⁸ The fifth centenary of their poet's birth was celebrated by the citizens of Lodi in 1907.

era of discovery, none was more remarkable than the new curriculum of study and physical exercise developed for the education of youth in the schools of the humanists.

An intimate record of even average experience in such a century has more than average interest, and Maphaeus Vegius, in his early poems and in the biographical passages of his historical and moral essays, vividly pictures the activities and enthusiasms of a talented and precocious child of this brilliant epoch. His accounts are incidental and fragmentary, but they have more significance than the barren framework of fact supplied by his fifteenth- and sixteenth-century biographers.

Family and childhood.—Maphaeus Vegius came of a substantial family. His father, Bellortus Vegius, and his mother, Caterina Lanteria, were “distinguished for noble lineage and both of them admirable for moral excellence.”¹⁹ He had at least two brothers and two sisters and was himself the second son.

Contrary to the usual practice among women of position, Caterina esteemed it a privilege and duty to suckle her own babes when she could; but for the elder boys considerations of health required her to secure a nurse. Maphaeus’ foster-mother was modest and bashful, with a disposition as gentle as her countenance. Her eyes were always down-cast in the fashion admired during the Renaissance.²⁰ Maphaeus looked back in after years to the influence of his nurse as wholly good.²¹ He did not fare so well, however, at the hands of the other servants.²² Their tales of ghosts and goblins instilled such terror in his baby mind that he was hardly able to shake off the impression even when he was a big boy in his teens.

His elder brother, Laurence,²³ a child of rare promise and gentle nature whom Maphaeus dearly loved, was an invalid from childhood ¹⁹Anonymous life prefaced to Vegius’ works, published at Lodi [?], 1613.

²⁰ Leonardo da Vinci, A Treatise on Painting, translated by J. F. Rigaud, London, 1906.

²¹ Maphaeus Vegius, De educatione liberorum, I, 5.

²² Ibid., I, 11.

²³ Ibid., I, 6.

and died early. To a second brother, Eustace, he inscribed his first prose work, the dialogue Philalethes, which, with another entitled De felicitate et miseria, passed for some time as a work of Lucian. It was a happy dedication, for Eustace was a man whose character and love of learning made him, like a second Philalethes, fit to welcome Truth, wounded and bleeding from the violence of an unscrupulous age. In concluding his preface, Maphaeus remarks that, as others give their brothers jewels and furniture, things perishable, he dedicates to Eustace his quest for Truth, which is eternal. His sisters, Elizabeth and Monica,²⁴ were much younger. Maphaeus says that he brought them up himself. It was with paternal satisfaction that he received the news that they had both taken the veil. Toward the end of his life he dedicated to them a tract entitled De perseverantia religionis. These pages, full of learned quotation and allusion, presuppose a breadth of familiarity with sacred and profane authors far exceeding that recommended for girls in his own treatise on education.

Bellortus Vegius was genuinely interested in his sons' progress, and afforded them excellent opportunities for healthy rural life and for elaborate schooling.²⁵ Country rambles supplied Maphaeus with material which he soon put to use in the prolific epigrams of his adolescent years and in illustrations for his maturer poetry.

A pretty simile in the "Thirteenth Book" (lines 445-449), which describes Italian farmers congratulating one another when a long siege of rain is finally lifted, may well have come from this source. Homely wit was likewise bred of rustic experience. On one occasion little Maphaeus met a shepherd driving his flock in the depth of winter. His feet were bare and his cloak was scanty. The boy asked him how he bore the cold so well, to which the peasant answered: "Do you think, my son, that you would be cold if you had on all the clothes you own?" Maphaeus shook his head. "Then don't be surprised," said he, "that I am not cold. I always wear all the clothes I have."²⁶

²⁴ Maphaeus Vegius, De perseverantia religionis, I, 1.

²⁵ Maphaeus Vegius, De educatione liberorum, I, 4; II, 9; III, 2, and the anonymous Life prefixed to the Basle edition of Vegius' works.

²⁶ Maphaeus Vegius, De educatione liberorum, I, 6.

His education.—At seven²⁷ Maphaeus was sent to school in Milan²⁸ to a “plagosus Orbilius,” who, like some more recent teachers, showed a very different face to his pupils’ parents from that which characterized him at the desk. Happily the boy was soon transferred to a dear old man whose genuine love of literature made up for lack of profound learning. Under his gentle tutelage, Maphaeus read omnivorously of his own free will from Virgil and Ovid and spared no pains to understand their meaning. Every day he learned by heart some passage for sheer love of it.

These were the years of the Franciscan Revival,²⁹ when its most famous preacher, Fra Bernardino of Siena, came to Milan. On feast days the teacher would say to his favorite pupils, of whom Maphaeus was one, “Sons, let us go to hear the good little brother who wears such poor and threadbare garments, but whose speech is so rich in grace, whose eloquence is so brilliant, who has such an apt turn for teaching and such majesty of expression and thought.”³⁰

The boys relied upon their teacher’s judgment, since they were too young to form their own, and listened with the closest attention, though they could not fully comprehend the “heaven-inspired discourse.” The memory of these sermons was still fresh after thirty years, when, at the Pope’s jubilee in 1450, Bernardino of Siena and Joan of Arc were first proposed for canonization. Maphaeus Vegius wrote one of the biographical appreciations of the great Franciscan preacher for this spectacular occasion. Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini, afterward Pope Pius II, also heard the famous friar in childhood. He describes him³¹ as always “jolly and merry; never was his face sad unless he was distressed over some public wrong.” Siennese gaiety joined to Franciscan playfulness commended his stern message of reform.

²⁷ Maphaeus Vegius De educatione liberorum, II, 2.

²⁸ Ibid., II, 9; II, 19.

²⁹ Lucas Wadding, Annales minorum, Naples, 1731–1860.

³⁰ Maphaeus Vegius, Vita sancti Bernardini, acta sanctorum, Maii V, 88.

³¹ Aeneas Silvius, De viris illustribus, De Bernardino Senensi. Stuttgart, Literarische Vereinbibliothek, 1843.

At fifteen a "furor poeticus" seized young Vegius, and he began to compose his Pompeiana, elegies and epigrams on country life.³² In these he followed a fashionable literary type which had a distinct affinity with Roman epigram but was also colored by medieval sarcastic verse. The poems contain some picturesque and tender passages,³³ but more that seem spiteful or vulgar to modern taste.

Bellortus Vegius broke in upon these youthful fancies and commanded his son to leave off frivolity and devote himself to dialectic.³⁴ The boy obeyed, though he found the study nothing short of "pestiferous." Maphaeus was destined eventually for the law, a pursuit even more distasteful to him than the study of dialectic. To quote his own language, "it was easier for Orpheus to withhold his gaze from Eurydice than for him to persist in the neglect of his beloved poets."

Pavia.—A happy change of fortune took him at nineteen to Pavia,³⁵ where the University was rapidly becoming a distinguished seat of the new learning. He found himself among congenial friends and was free to devote himself to poetry. Here, too, he studied Greek.³⁶

It was in these agreeable surroundings, when Vegius was a youth of twenty-one, that he wrote his "Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid." He knew almost by heart the epic of his beloved Virgil, to whom he offered this tribute in eager, youthful homage. The original caption was A Supplement to the Twelfth Book of the Aeneid. It bore the date, Pavia, October 4, 1428.³⁷

University days afforded no more memorable experience to Maphaeus Vegius than his intimacy with Lorenzo Valla,³⁸ one of the most ³² Maphaeus Vegius, Pompeiana, 1423; J. P. Nicéron, Memoires; G. Ghilini, Teatro.

³³ L. Raffaele, Maffeo Vegio (Bologna, 1909), pages 5-14.

³⁴ J. A. Saxius, Historia literaria typographica mediolanensis, letter to Bartolomeo de la Capra, page 405.

³⁵ M. Minoia, La vita di Maffeo Vegio (Lodi, 1896), chapter ii; L. Raffaele, Maffeo Vegio (Bologna, 1909), page 15.

³⁶ Vespasiano da Bisticci, Vite (Florence, 1859), "Vita di Maffeo Veggio."

³⁷ See list of works, pages 145-146.

³⁸ A. Mancini, Vita di Lorenzo Valla (Florence, 1891), page 37.

original, as well as one of the most critical minds of that generation. The publication of Valla's observations on the text of Isaiah ranked him at once as the foremost Biblical scholar of the time. It was he who exposed the Donation of Constantine and the pseudo-Isadorian Decretals.³⁹ Their friends said that Vegius exercised a salutary restraint on the fiery young radical. Many years later they renewed their intimacy in Rome as papal secretaries.

In 1431 the plague broke up town life. Vegius fled to Lodi⁴⁰ to a charming retreat, described by Valla as a cottage with a lovely orchard near a Gregorian portico. To these charms were added a cook and several servitors. But Vegius pined for his gay companions, and, like Ovid in his exile, found consolation in tearful elegy.

Florence.—When the danger was past we find him again in Pavia and later in Milan, where he vainly aspired to a laureate's crown from the powerful Visconti.⁴¹ Finally, he was off to seek his fortune among the first men of that age in Florence. His literary passports gained him immediate access to the brilliant galaxy of writers attached to the Medicean and papal courts. Their pastime was exchange of verses, and Vegius was not a whit behind the rest. He forthwith dedicated two books of distichs to Carlo Marsuppini, the leading poet of that learned circle, an attention which the Cardinal acknowledged in a series of epigrams. To Leonardo Bruni, Vegius inscribed two books of epigrams. The aged historian responded with helpful criticism.

The Curia was then in Florence and, through the good offices of his friends, Vegius obtained preferment under the hardheaded pope, Eugenius IV. For half a dozen years he served as abbreviator, and was then promoted to the rank of datary. He traveled with the papal court to Bologna, to Ferrara, and back again to Florence, marking his stay in the various cities by epitaphs on the great men, ecclesiastical, scientific, and literary, who died within those years.⁴² Vegius' time was largely absorbed by a tedious routine of pontifical correspondence. His amusement in leisure hours remained the composition of verse.

³⁹ C. B. Coleman, Lorenzo Valla on the Donation of Constantine, Yale University Press, 1922.

⁴⁰ Carmina poetarum italorum, II, 9 and 10; see also a letter of Vegius dated 1433, J. A. Saxius, Historia literaria typographica mediolanensis (Milan, 1745).

⁴¹ Maphaeus Vegius, Convivium Deorum, 1430; also Ad Philippum Mariam Angelum ducem mediolanensium. See list of works, pages 145-146.

Rome.—The year 1443 marks the final return of the papacy to Rome, where Vegius spent the remaining fifteen years of his life. Here he was again associated with Lorenzo Valla, who introduces one of his dialogues⁴³ with a description of a Christmas excursion to the Sacro Speco at Subiaco and thence to Monte Cassino. Pietro di Noceto, trusted minister of Nicholas V, Maphaeus Vegius, Flavius Blondus, and Valla himself made up the party. Noceto fell in with hunters, in whose company he ranged the wooded hills below the monastery, while the savants took occasion to examine old books in the library.

In December of his first year in Rome, Vegius was appointed Canon of the Basilica of Saint Peter,⁴⁴ an office which he held until his death. A report was current in the fifteenth century that he became an Augustinian friar.⁴⁵ Luigi Raffaele⁴⁶ successfully refutes this statement, which was a natural supposition in view of Vegius' well-known devotion to Saint Monica and her son.

Authorship.—Vegius' life as a popular writer may be divided neatly into two periods of fifteen years each. In the first, like most young men of parts in the early fifteenth century, he wrote pagan poetry; in the second, which was the more prolific of the two, his dialogues, essays, epistles, psalms, hymns, and liturgies recall the great religious subjects that glow before our eyes in quattrocento frescoes. Flavoring all the copious writing of this very industrious author is a kind of Maronian essence, which does not lose its savor even after Augustine succeeded Virgil as his patron saint. The Puritan habit of discoursing in Biblical language is the closest literary parallel to Ma-

⁴² Carmina poetarum italorum, X, 305 ff.

⁴³ Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini, Tractatus, 1453.

⁴⁴ Regesta Laterana, 399, Bull of Eugenius IV, naming Vegius Canon of Saint Peter's.

⁴⁵ Vespasiano da Bisticci, Vite (Florence, 1859), "Vita di Maffeo Veggio."

⁴⁶ L. Raffaele, Maffeo Veggio (Bologna, 1909), Correspondence quoted on pages 44 ff.

phaeus Vegius' habit of employing the words and phrases of his adored master, Virgil.

In Rome, Vegius concentrated his attention on philosophical and ecclesiastical studies. Saint Augustine was now the unrivaled master of his heart. It was natural for humanists to feel a special kinship to the learned Bishop of Hippo; like themselves, he had come to Christianity "through the door of the classics." In Vegius' case there may also have been an inherited reverence. His parents had named their daughters after Augustine's mother Monica and her sister Elizabeth. Vegius expressly states that it was through the influence of his two sisters that he took holy orders, a decision which was a surprise, he says, even to himself.⁴⁷ As a boy he had followed Saint Augustine's steps in Northern Italy. It was at Milan that the ardent young African student had embraced Latin Christianity, and his relics were enshrined in Pavia.

In 1455 Vegius built a chapel⁴⁸ in honor of Saint Monica, whose bones had been translated from Ostia and received in Rome with great pomp in 1430. He commissioned Isaia di Pippo di Gante da Pisa, who had carved the tomb of Eugenius IV and who may have wrought the grave slab of Fra Angelico, to design and execute the monument for which he composed an inscription in elegiac couplets. He also prepared an account of her life in three books, to which he added sacred offices in her name and in that of her son. The titles of eight of his compositions bear witness to his special veneration of the mother Monica and her son Augustine. They are: Vita et officium B. Monicæ; Officium translationis B. Monicæ; De vita et obitu B. Monicæ ex verbis S. Augustini; Laudatio B. Monicæ; Salutatio B. Monicæ; In Sanctam Monicam; Officium conversionis B. Augustini; Vita et officium B. Augustini.

Maphaeus Vegius' love of ancient literature plays almost as distinct a rôle in the period of his prose writing as in his earlier works in verse.⁴⁹ His quotations are amazingly profuse and cover an astonish-

⁴⁷ Maphaeus Vegius, De perseverantia religionis, I, 1.

⁴⁸ G. S. Davies, The Sculptured Tombs of the Fifteenth Century in Rome (London, 1910), page 70; C. Janning, Acta sanctorum (Rome, 1867), Junii VII, 58.

⁴⁹ Maphaeus Vegius, De perseverantia religionis, V, 5.

ing range. In a single chapter on prayer,⁵⁰ in the tract dedicated to his two cloistered sisters, he quotes from saints and doctors, Bernard, Basil, Chrysostom, Ambrose, Cyprian, Jerome, Climax, Cassian, Porphyry, and Eusebius; from the Old Testament books, Exodus, Psalms, Daniel, and Isaiah; from the Gospels of Matthew, Luke, and John; from Apollonius of Tyana and Hermes Trismegistus. He finally caps his argument with a passage from the Greek dramatist Menander and with the famous conclusion of the second satire of the Roman poet Persius. In his treatise on education, which was composed at this time,⁵¹ he makes a sound knowledge of the Latin language and a liberal familiarity with pagan literature, supplemented by a generous admixture of scriptural and ecclesiastical reading, the basis of learning and culture.⁵² Vegius differed from other educationalists of the century in his stronger insistence on religious training. His suggestions for the instruction of girls show less advance from medieval prejudices than his curriculum for boys. Modesty of the crystalline type portrayed in Fra Angelico's virgins can, he thinks, be secured by limited reading, little exercise, few baths, much attention to household arts, and extensive contemplation of such models of feminine fortitude and virtue as Saint Monica and her sister Elizabeth.⁵³

De educatione liberorum et eorum claris moribus assumes an important place in the prolific pedagogic output of the fifteenth century because of its detailed completeness and because of the adequate impression that it gives of the extent to which the ideals of progressive educational liberals were assimilated by moderate religious conservatives. To the re-applied slogans of antiquity, "a sound mind in a sound body" and "reverence for the age of childhood," is added a moral emphasis from the intervening Christian centuries.⁵⁴ Physical vigor and mental power are to be tempered and made significant by

⁵⁰ Ibid., V, 2.

⁵¹ Rome, 1444. See chronological list of the writings of Maphaeus Vegius, on pages 145 and 146.

⁵² Maphaeus Vegius, De educatione liberorum, II, 18-20.

⁵³ Ibid., III, 12-15.

⁵⁴ Ibid., IV.

Christian virtue. After the invention of printing this essay was translated into French. It had a great vogue and was ascribed to the erratic scholar Francesco Filelfo⁵⁵ (1398–1481), whose Greek studies and Latin eloquence added luster to Florentine humanism, though pride and bad temper embittered his relations with his more amiable contemporaries.

During the whole of Vegius' Roman experience the papal city was astir with rebuilding. The enterprise of Nicholas V⁵⁶ surpassed even that of Leo IV, and deserves to be ranked with the prodigious projects of that greatest of city-planners, Julius Caesar. In the course of excavation and construction many antique treasures came to light. It occurred to Maphaeus Vegius to do, in a small way, for Christian Rome what Flavius Blondus was doing for the Pagan City in his monumental treatise entitled Roma instaurata. The result of our author's "promenades archéologiques" is a history of the old Basilica of Saint Peter. Among other inscriptions which he rescued from destruction is the epitaph of the medieval poetess Proba of the Anician family whose long-lived Virgilian cento on Old Testament history may still be read. Her use of Virgil's words was even more fantastic than Vegius' own. Comparetti remarks, with Proba in mind, that in the sixth century Virgil's chief office was to teach children in the schools and so provide them with a "means of emphasizing their childishness when they grew up."⁵⁷ Proba worshiped the letter of Virgil's language; Vegius, who was, in a certain sense, her successor after a thousand years, paid homage to its spirit.

The archaeological treatise De rebus antiquis memorabilibus Basilicae Sancti Petri Romae was Vegius' last work. It entitles its author to be ranked as the founder of the study of Christian archaeology.⁵⁸ He had begun his career as a scholar in the ardent study of Rome's ⁵⁵ J. P. Nicéron, Memoires (Paris, 1734), Volume XXVI.

⁵⁶ A. S. Cox (Brinton), "Nicholas V, a Restorer of the Papal City," Art and Archaeology, July, 1918.

⁵⁷ D. Comparetti, Virgil in the Middle Ages, translated by E. F. M. Benecke (London, 1895), page 54. See also Aschbach, Die Anicier und die romische Dichterin Proba (Vienna, 1870), pages 54 ff.

⁵⁸ J. B. de Rossi, Inscriptiones christianae (Rome, 1857–1888), chapter ii.

pagan poets; he concluded it with earnest and original investigation of the early monuments of her Christian Church. He died in 1458 and was buried in the chapel which he had dedicated to Saint Monica. The marble slab bearing his name and effigy has disappeared. An interesting eulogy from among several composed in his honor appears in the edition of his works published at Milan in 1613. It was written by the younger Carlo Aretino about his father's friend:

HIC, MAPHAEE, IACES INIMICA MORTE SOLUTUS
 QUEM SIBI PRAEREPTUM LINGUA LATINA DOLET.
 NON LASCIVUS ERAS, QUALES SUNT SAEPE POETAE,
 MENS TIBI CUM CASTO CORPORE SANCTA FUIT.
 EDITA TESTANTUR CENTENA VOLUMINA PER TE,
 INGENII FUERINT FLUMINA QUANTA TUI,
 URBS TE LAUDENSIS VEGIORUM E SANGUINE CLARO
 EDIDIT, EXSTINCTUM ROMA VETUSTA TENET.⁵⁹

Friends and patrons.—Maphaeus Vegius' friends and patrons were literary men, but what person of position in the early fifteenth century was not a writer or a fighter? Talent was common, and fashion decreed that aspirants to public notice, if they did not wield the sword, should

... call for pen and ink to show their wit,
 For those who cannot write and those who can
 All rhyme and scrawl and scribble to a man.

A list of his associates in Pavia, Florence, and Rome includes the ablest humanists of the time. In public life these men were administrators of Church and State; in private life they were scholars. They brought to light the legacy of antiquity, they originated historical criticism, they were precursors of modern science. Fresh knowledge and appreciation of the great personalities of Greece and Rome stimulated new enthusiasm for individual distinction. Ways opened in all directions for spontaneous, inwardly inspired thought, investigation, and action. By official appointments, the curia and the Italian city-states paid homage to the culture derived from learning and eloquence.

⁵⁹ Opera Vegii (Lodi [?], 1613), Part II, page 72.

Under this stimulating patronage the humanists produced an enormous body of writing in prose and verse. Their fame was instantaneous and widespread. The impermanence of their reputation, as compared with that of painters and sculptors of the early Renaissance, is due to the fact that Europe promptly absorbed and bettered their literary achievement, while the charm of quattrocento painting has remained unparalleled. In one notable respect, however, these men deserve our special thanks. The pagan poets of the Renaissance preceded the pagan painters and for them turned a searchlight on antiquity, disclosing loveliness unguessed-at for a thousand years. If Italian poets and mythologists had not revealed gods and heroes in a radiance as familiar and appealing as that with which the Church had illumined Christian legend, Botticelli could not have followed his early Madonnas with the lovely "Primavera" nor his famous "Adoration" with "Pallas and the Centaur." Poets brought pagan beauty to light, then painters caught the vision and left behind them a record, undimmed by five hundred years, of that first radiant impression.⁶⁰ The poets were, for the most part, aristocrats and the painters were guildsmen and burghers; but the comparative merit of their accomplishment is correctly gauged by the relative popularity in our own day of Paulus Jovius' Eulogies of Learned Men and Vasari's Lives of the Painters and Sculptors.

The fifteenth century was an age of travel, when scholars migrated from court to court, from Naples to Milan, from Ferrara to Florence. As Rome regained her ancient prestige under Nicholas V and his successors, they contributed their fame to enhance the brilliance of the papal city. They visited Constantinople in search of Greek manuscripts and Northern Europe on diplomatic errands. Much of their voluminous correspondence has survived in manuscript or in ponderous black-letter volumes. Positive in their loves, but still more definite and voluble in their hates, each man's intellectual career dominated his human experience. We know the features of the more distinguished humanists from their portraits on medallions and from the sculptured effigies upon their tombs. High-souled and exquisite, they added a new type to European patterns of manhood. Pagan thought lured them with its iridescent charm to strip off the shackles of asceticism and become modern men. But fifteen centuries of Christianity could not be ignored. Many humanists, like Traversari and Vegius, captivated in youth by the new freedom, came to realize as they grew older that it was more significant to interpret the new knowledge in terms of Christianity than to revive an unaltered paganism. Their writings glow with the same pure flame of Christian emotion that illumined the Madonnas of Fra Angelico and the della Robbias.

⁶⁰ Walter Pater, The Renaissance, London, 1900, page 59.

Vegius' early patrons were students and ecclesiastics in and near his native town who recognized the boy's precocity and provided him opportunities to read the books he loved. In 1421, his own bishop, Gerardo Landriani, made an important literary discovery that set all Lodi on fire with enthusiasm. Among dusty documents in an old chest in the cathedral, he came upon a manuscript of the rhetorical works of Cicero. The Brutus was entirely new to the world of scholars. De Oratore and the Orator were previously known only from imperfect copies. News of the recovery of these important treatises traveled to the very outposts of civilization with remarkable rapidity considering the difficulties of travel in this period. Poggio Bracciolini, the indefatigable discoverer of ancient manuscripts, who had added no less than fifteen authors to those who were known and read from century to century through the Middle Ages, was visiting in Britain, but tidings of the new find quickly reached him, as they did Aurispa in Constantinople. So thrilling an event could not fail to stir the heart of our fourteen-year-old humanist, Maphaeus Vegius, who composed an epigram to celebrate it. More than twenty years later, he dedicated his dialogue De felicitate et miseria to this same fellowtownsman, now Cardinal Landriani.

In spite of much court poetry written during the next decade, notably a Convivium Deorum and a Carmen heroicum ad Philippum Mariam Angelum Ducem Mediolanensium and some outrageous flattery of the Visconti, Maphaeus gained no preferment with the ducal family. Bartolomeo de la Capra, the archbishop of Milan, was, however, a frank friend and critic. He praised Maphaeus for his facile pen, while he blamed the wanton subjects of many of his early poems. To him young Vegius dedicated his Vocabolista, a glossary of legal terms.⁶¹ De la Capra was, like Vegius, a lover of Virgil. Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini describes him as "learned in the highest degree, but more given to poetry than to other fields of knowledge. Virgil he had ever before him and he wrote elegant verse."⁶²

At Pavia, Vegius himself appears in the rôle of patron to a younger writer named Antonio d' Aşti, who expressed his warm appreciation of his poet friend by an enthusiastic eulogy in a poem entitled De varietate Fortunae.

Within the next few years Vegius dedicated a book of elegies to Lanzarotto Crotti, governor of the Castle of Pavia, whose brother, Luigi, was ducal secretary and, in that capacity, had jurisdiction over the library of a thousand or more volumes, which included, in addition to medieval ecclesiastical writings, the works of Homer, Plato, and Aristotle in Greek, and, among Roman authors, Terence, Cicero, Sallust, Virgil, Horace, Ovid, Lucan, Statius, Pliny, Persius, Juvenal, Seneca, Suetonius, Valerius Maximus, and Claudian. Young Vegius doubtless had access to these books.⁶³

A large and representative group of humanists sojourned from time to time in Pavia, where the University was yearly increasing in importance as a center of the new learning. In these stimulating surroundings, Vegius remained almost continuously from the age of twenty to that of thirty. He was on excellent terms with all the great men who graced the new academy. He numbered among his friends the pioneer archaeologist of the Renaissance, Cyriaco of Ancona, who has been cleverly styled the Schliemann of his time. No doubt Cyriaco and Flavius Blondus are to a certain degree responsible for the taste for antiquities which resulted in Vegius' last work, De rebus antiquis memorabilibus basilicae Sancti Petri.

Antonio Beccadelli, soon to become the most notorious poet of his generation, who in his merry old age founded the literary academy at ⁶¹ Correspondence between Vegius and De la Capra, in J. A. Saxius, Historia literaria typographica mediolanensis (Milan, 1745).

⁶² Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini, De viris illustribus, Stuttgart, Literarische Vereinsbibliothek (1843), Volume I.

⁶³ G. d'Adda, Indagini sulla libreria visconteo sforzesca nel castello di Pavia, Milan, 1875. Cited by M. Minoia in La vita di Maffeo Vegio, Lodi, 1898.

Naples, had frequent association with Vegius in Pavia. On one occasion he sent their mutual friend, the poet Cambio Zambeccari, a manuscript of Virgil's poems. The accuracy of the copy was attested both by himself and Vegius, whom he styled "poetam haud reiiciendum." He wrote to another friend that Maphaeus could attain distinction if only he would guard against his over-great ease of composition—" Modo sibi tantum non indulgeat."⁶⁴

In spite of a brief passage at arms over their respective supplements to the Aeneid,⁶⁵ Pier Candido Decembrio, Latin secretary to the Duke of Milan, was Vegius' friend. The dedications of Decembrio's books illustrate how cosmopolitan was the acquaintanceship of individual Italian scholars. His Latin version of the fifth book of Plato's Republic was inscribed to Duke Humphrey of Gloucester, a literal rendering of books one to four of the Iliad to John II of Castile, and a translation of Appian's Civil Wars to Alfonso, King of Naples.

A special favorite of Maphaeus Vegius was the lovesick poet, Mar-rasius of Sicily, who almost forgot his desolation in pleasure at reading Vegius' consolatory elegy written in the person of his cruel but lovely lady, Angelina Piccolomini.

Antonio da Rho, a friar minor, was Beccadelli's hardly less scandalous literary enemy. After teaching at Pavia, he succeeded Gasparino Barzizza in the chair of rhetoric at Milan. Nothing could be more extravagant than his praise of Vegius in several letters that have survived.

Reference has already been made to the friendship of Vegius and Valla. In a dialogue, De vero bono, which belongs to Valla's youth, he puts the gentle arguments of Epicurus in the mouth of Vegius.⁶⁶ A long letter is extant in which Vegius pleads with his hot-headed friend to be tolerant of criticism.⁶⁷ Finally, a literary quarrel, in which Valla was one of the main figures, broke up the first circle of humanists in Pavia.

⁶⁴ M. Minoia, La vita di Maffeo Vegio (Lodi, 1896), pages 39 f.

⁶⁵ L. Raffaele, Maffeo Vegio (Bologna, 1909), pages 21 f.

⁶⁶ Printed at Louvain, 1483, and at Basle, 1519 and 1540, with some alterations.

⁶⁷ Barozzi and Sabbadini, Studi sul Panormita e sul Valla (Florence, 1891), page 89.

Of his papal patrons, Eugenius IV and Nicholas V, Vegius writes in terms of enthusiastic devotion in his essay on the antiquities of Saint Peter's and in various other places. Three of his longer poems were dedicated to Eugenius.⁶⁸ An honorary epitaph celebrates Nicholas as "aemulus Numae" and "alter Augustus."⁶⁹ The first epithet refers to his mild measures toward the Turks, the second to his patronage of learning. Though Nicholas saw no way to avert the fall of Constantinople, he did know how to rescue its manuscripts, and he evolved a magnificent plan for making them available through translation to scholars of the West. The climax of Vegius' epitaph is a distich on the healing of the Great Schism.

Qui scissum ecclesiae Pastor compegit ovile
At sua errantes claustra reduxit oves.

Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini was another ecclesiastical patron. His quick, allusive repartee, "Sum Pius Aeneas," to the cardinal who asked at his election what pontifical name he desired to assume, illustrates how his thought was tinged with Virgilian phraseology. Vegius is not infrequently mentioned in Aeneas Silvius' extensive correspondence. A curious letter, number 108, addressed to Procopius of Rabenstein, describes Vegius in the rôle of guide to the strange, noteworthy sights of Fortune's realm. A still more novel jeu d'esprit is the dialogue⁷⁰ in which Bernardino of Siena conducts Aeneas Silvius to the kingdom of the dead where he sees Saint John the Evangelist, the Prophet Elijah, Constantine the Great, Valla the humanist, Vegius the poet, and even the Almighty himself.

During the council at Ferrara, a friendship was formed between Vegius and Guarino of Verona (1374-1460), the distinguished preceptor to the son and heir of Marquis Niccolo d'Este. From his famous school, says Bartolomeo Facio, came more scholars "than warriors out of the Trojan horse." He was the first Italian humanist to travel in the East and study at Byzantium. Because of his wide acquaintance in Italy and the Levant, and because of his proficiency in Greek and Latin eloquence, Guarino was selected to interpret between the Eastern and Western bishops at the Council which formally ended the Great Schism. Vegius was then serving as a papal secretary.

⁶⁸ Maphaeus Vegius, Antoniodos libri quattuor, Bologna, 1433; De vita et obitu beati Caelistini Quinti papae, Rome, 1445; De vita et obitu beatæ Monicae, Rome, 1453-1458.

⁶⁹ Carmina poetarum italorum, X, 309.

⁷⁰ William Boulting, Aeneas Silvius (London, 1908), page 216; Aeneas Silvius, Dialogi, Rome, 1453.

At Florence, Maphaeus Vegius was included in the illustrious society of Medicean scholars. Flavio Blondo, Leonardo Bruni, Carlo Marsuppini, and Ambrogio Traversari were his literary confreres.

Blondus (1388-1463) praises Vegius as poet and essayist in Italia illustrata, one of his four monumental volumes on the antiquarian lore of Rome and Italy. To Bruni, Maphaeus dedicated two books of epigrams.⁷¹ Among them are three in honor of Virgil:

IN VIRGILIUM ET OVIDUM

Nasonem Sulmo tibi dat si quaeris amores,
Proelia si quaeris Mantua Virgilium,
Proelia si pariter, pariter si quaeris amores,
Sufficietque unus haec tibi Virgilius.

IN VIRGILIUM

Diruta quae flammis olim Maro Pergama dixit,
In flammis moriens iussit et inde dari.
Non tulit Augustus, rapuitque ex ignibus ignes,
Et tristi e busto tot sacra busta ducum.
Quae vestra, o Teucrici, Vulcanum iniuria laesit?
Neptunus certe dignior ultor erat.

Qui, Mæro, Castalias tantum gustaveris undas
Mirum Lethaeas quam bene scribis aquas?
Sed qui scribit aquas Lethaeas tam bene, numquam
Tangere, Lethaeae, debueratis, aquae.
Quid, queror? at totiens quas etsi spiritus, at non Saltem Lethaeas nomen adivit aquas?

The rest are on subjects varied and strange, some trivial, some coarse. They are part of the profuse expression of lavish wantonness that belonged to the Renaissance. The grave and stately chancellor of Florence bade the author employ his muse upon higher themes. Four books on the quest of the Golden Fleece resulted from this advice.

⁷¹ Luigi Raffaele, Maffeo Vegio, Bologna, 1909. He quotes the two books entire, pages 158 ff.

Two books of distichs were inscribed to another chancellor of Florence, the no less illustrious Carlo Marsuppini (1399-1453), whose astonishing feats of memory were the admiration of his age. Immediately following the dedication of this token and pledge of love from Vegius to his new patron, are four epitaphs on Virgil:

I

Pastor oves et arator agros: et proelia miles
Instruxi aeterno clarus honore Maro.

II

Ecce Maro, cuius divino carmine musa
Per silvas et agros ad fera bella venit.

III

Silvas, rura, acies cecini: mihi Mantua mater:
Nomen Virgilius: Parthenope tumulus.

IV

Pascua rusque canens peragraram, bella sequebar,
Nondum finieram: Virgilius perii.

Marsuppini acknowledged Vegius' tribute by a sequence of enthusiastic couplets culminating in the lines:

Disticha tu nectis, frondes tibi nectat Apollo,
Impediatque tuas bina corona comas.

Leonardo Bruni and Carlo Marsuppini lie buried opposite each other in the right and left aisles of the church of Santa Croce, the Westminster Abbey of Florence. Bruni's sepulchral inscription was composed by Marsuppini with the ancient epitaph of Plautus still echoing in his ears:

Postquam Leonardus e vita migravit, Historia luget, Eloquentia muta est, ferturque Musas tum Graecas tum Latinas lacrimas tenere non potuisse.

The exquisite refinement of the two effigies, each a masterpiece, that of Bruni by Bernardino Rosinello and that of Marsuppini by Disiderio da Settignano, contributes more, perhaps, than all their Latin poems to convey to modern men the significance and charm of Italian humanism.

In Ambrogio Traversari (1380-1493), general of the Order of the Camaldulites, Maphaeus Vegius found a friend who settled the conflicting claims of Christian and pagan literature entirely in favor of the Church. Traversari was an indefatigable translator. His Latin versions of the Greek lives of the Fathers, of the Theophrastus of Aeneas of Gaza, and of the tracts and homilies of Saint Chrysostom were new and needed.

The Florentine biographer, Vespasiano da Biſticci, pays tribute to Traversari's learning and at the same time pictures a characteristic scene among Medicean literati in recounting the following incident:

One day, when Niccolo [de' Niccoli] and Cosimo [de' Medici] were with Brother Ambrogio he was translating Saint John Chrysostom on The Epistles of Saint Paul. He translated, and Niccolo, who was an exceedingly rapid scribe, took it down in cursive script; but he could not equal the speed with which Brother Ambrogio translated, in an elaborate style without further need of correction. After a time Niccolo said to Brother Ambrogio: "Go slowly [andate adagio]! I can't keep up." This version in Niccolo's handwriting is still in San Marco. You can see that the corrections are exceedingly few.⁷²

Vegius also alludes to Traversari's unprecedented speed of composition in the lines:

Clarus in eloquio Graio; clarusque Latino,
Et pollens studiis clarus et ipse sacris.
Si scripta attendas, fuit haud velocius ulli;
Si vitam haud ulli mitius ingenium.⁷³

Though Traversari was acknowledged to be the most rapid translator of his generation, he begrudged the time spent at the explicit command of Cosimo on his Latin rendering of Diogenes Laertius' Lives of the Philosophers. One might have supposed that Brother Ambrogio, who was the discoverer of Nepos' lives of Atticus and Cato, would have found his study of ancient Greek biographies a congenial counterpart to the lives of the Christian Fathers; but his scruples admitted no luxurious enjoyment of pagan literature. In his whole voluminous correspondence only once does he permit himself to quote from a classic poet. This unique quotation is from Virgil's Eclogues.⁷⁴ Though he had been trained in Greek, Roman, and Hebrew, his true life work was not linguistic; it was not even literary, it was theological. But it can be said with truth that his study of the Church Fathers was made vivid by the new spirit of inquiry at the root of all productive scholarship of the early quattrocento.

⁷² Vespasiano da Biſticci, Vite, Florence, 1859.

⁷³ Carmina poetarum italorum, X, 313.

“THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF THE ‘AENEID’”: THE ALLEGORIZERS

The humanists looked at ancient literature through a prism of allegory. Donatus' (ca. 333) and Fulgentius' (ca. 520) elaborate interpretations of the Aeneid, which had influenced Dante and Petrarch, still conditioned the approach to Virgil of such men as Leon Battista Alberti (1404–1472), Cristoforo Landini (1424–1504), and Maphaeus Vegius. In their eyes, the Aeneid was the symbolic journey of a hero soul to his heaven-set goal; it was, in a sense, the “Pilgrim's Progress” of antiquity. The Aeneas of Augustan Rome, the Aeneas of the allegorizers, and Bunyan's Pilgrim are typical representatives of three epochs in Western thought. The Augustan Aeneas was a hero, a Trojan aristocrat, founding, through mighty deeds, an earthly empire; the allegorical Aeneas who succeeded him in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance was a saint and spiritual guide, founding, by miracles and pious acts, a kingdom in the heavens where he was to become a kind of heavenly patron. The “Pilgrim” of the Reformation was a plain man “of a low and unconsiderable generation,” “clothed in rags.” When he should escape from the burdens of the world and its sin, he would become only a humble citizen of the heavenly city. Thus did paganism, medievalism, and Puritanism, each express its own peculiar aspiration for the final goal. The first emphasized a this-world end, the founding of immortal Rome. The second aspired to an otherworld end in which the social adjustments of feudalism were carried over into the heavenly hierarchy of the New Jerusalem. The third, likewise Christian, also sought an other-world end, but this goal was an ideal congenial to the spirit which gave rise to modern democracy. According to the Puritan conception, each man counted equally before God.

⁷⁴ Ambrogio Traversari, Epistulae, III, 99; J. E. Sandys, A History of Classical Scholarship, II, 44.

Virgil's voyager was a hero, goddess-born. He set out with a divine commission. True, he was not always equally assured of the feasibility of his quest, nor of its vast implications, but whenever he faltered, the holy call rang out again. After the beguiling months in Carthage, where Aeneas, who, it must be remembered, was the son of a mortal father, ventured to tarry for a woman's love, not only a challenge from heaven but even a descent into hell was required to sublimate the numbing memory of human happiness. Not only was renewed intercourse with his aged sire required to re-impress his obligation; he must actually behold the long line of his descendants, the Roman heroes to whom he owed fulfilment of his heaven-appointed task. Aeneas comes forth from Acheron by the gate of dreams, rededicated to his mission, which was the founding of Imperial Rome.

But the Middle Ages, under the combined influence of Platonic philosophy, which saw the things of sense as imperfect copies of ideal beauty, and of Christianity with its apocalyptic hope, had vaster ideals than those of earthly imperial ambition. Men's eyes were fixed on a better world beyond the clouds, a Celestial City, "not made with hands," rather than on the marble splendor set upon seven material hills. Not only were images of sense thought of as outer husks of diviner Reality, but great literature likewise, including both the Bible and the Aeneid, was valued as the symbolic expression of hidden truth. Many interpreters said of Moses what Master Phaer said of Virgil in the conclusion of his explanation of the Aeneid: "For you know there be many mysticall secretes in this writer." Comparetti's criticism of allegory as "a species of dialectical hallucination, which owes its origin to those earnest convictions which are natural to a vigorous and impulsive temperament,"⁷⁵ falls far short of the truth. In the Middle ⁷⁵ D. Comparetti, Virgil in the Middle Ages, translated by E. F. M. Benecke (London, 1895), page 106.

Ages, allegory results from a philosophy which admitted two methods of procedure: the method of Reason to approach the half-truths of this world; and the method of Faith to attain the mystic truths of the next. The allegorizers could by faith pierce

Wndir the cluddes of dirk poetry to where

Hid lyis thair mony a notable hiſtory⁷⁶

in the same way that the Christian could reach through the sacraments of the Church to the inner saving grace.

The turning of men's highest aspirations from the things of sense to another world, and the tendency to see all things with a twofold vision, by the eye of reason and the eye of faith, resulted in a symbolic interpretation of the Aeneid. As a parable, however, the poem was ethically incomplete. Not only was there a this-world ending, but the saint's reward was not described. The "Thirteenth Book" found favor because it supplied these two moral demands. Its substance was already implicit in Virgil's prophecies in Book I; but the Carmen Vegii made them explicit in the completion of the narrative. Poetic technique required that an epic should never "begin at the beginning" nor "end at the end," and that it should "keep the goal in mind, but not on paper."⁷⁷ Moralists required that wherever hagiography began, it should at least end at the end, and that the goal should be heavenly beatitude. Either Latium must be symbolically interpreted as the heavenly goal, or Aeneas must be finally translated to the stars. Renaissance religion, which had for its ideal not only a kingdom of heaven but also the canonization of saints, had room for both. The apotheosis of Aeneas became the symbol of heavenly assurance that the divine kingdom had been won. Thus Christian exegesis, centered as it was on the supernatural and replacing the this-world ideals of the ancients with other-world aims of the Church, opened the way for a supplement to the Aeneid in order to bring Aeneas to heaven.

⁷⁶ Gavin Douglas, The XIII Bukes of Eneados (London, 1553), Prologue to Book I.

⁷⁷ R. S. Conway, The Architecture of the Epic, Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, Volume IX, No. 2, July, 1925.

Two passages from Maphaeus Vegius' own writings are apt illustrations of his method of allegorical interpretation. One occurs in the essay On Education (II, 28), the other in the tract On Perseverance in Religion (I, 5). Vegius recommends the two supreme epic poets, Homer and Virgil, as the basis of literary training and moral instruction for youth:

If we were not hurrying on to treat of other matters, perhaps we might touch upon the point that the whole Aeneid holds concealed beneath the ornament of poetic imagery the highest mystery of philosophy. But we really ought not to omit that part of the discussion which bears upon the matter which we are considering. For Virgil means to show, under the guise of Aeneas, man endowed with every virtue as he appears now in misfortune and again in happiness. By similar token, in Dido he strives to teach women, too, by what rational counsels they ought to order their lives in eager longing for praise, in fear of dishonor and pitiful ruin. For what woman is not moved by Dido's example and set on fire with zeal for goodness, as she hears how earnestly the queen devoted herself to her task, established walls for her great city, regulated institutions and laws for the people in a spirit of justice, and, even though her husband was dead, won high renown and reverence for herself and inspired fear in her neighbors by keeping her faith and promise? And yet is the heart not shaken, terrified, and affrighted by the knowledge that she fell madly in love with her guest, a mere stranger, gave up the rule of her people, spent her time in such pursuits as merrymaking and feasting, and in the end, forsaken by her lover, in grief and affliction, bereft of all hope, resolved to compass her own death? Will not a woman choose to devote herself to virtue, though it be austere, when its fruits are shown to be so sweet rather than to succumb to seductive passion, when its fruits are described as so bitter?

Vegius thinks it well to remark that the whole narrative contains not a word or phrase which could conduce to baseness.

The second passage is even more explicit in its identifications. Here Aeneas is the type of perseverance. His exhortation is quoted in full:

"O socii (neque enim ignari sumus ante malorum),
o passi graviores, dabit deus his quoque finem.
vos et Scyllaeam rabiem penitusque sonantis accestis scopulos, vos et Cyclopa saxa experti; revocate animos maestumque timorem mittite; forsan et haec olim meminisse iuvabit per varios casus, per tot discrimina rerum tendimus in Latium, sedes ubi fata quietas ostendunt; illic fas regna resurgere Troiae, durate, et vosmet rebus servate secundis."

It is followed by the comment:

I do not see how the thought could be expressed by any Christian author in holier words or in phrases better fitted to accord with our faith than these. We are here taught to remember the past with joy, to bear the present bravely, to hope for a better future, and, finally, to cultivate perseverance at all times with a hero's might, and buckle it to our souls with closer bands. For if we interpret Scylla's rage and the other perils of the deep as the vexations and revilings of the world and the devils, if we substitute the word heaven for Latium and life for Troy, why might the passage not have come from the pen of the Apostle Paul?

Later in the same chapter we read:

Aeneas (whom the poet depicts as goodness watching and striving for the benefit of others) sails this great and wide sea of earthly life. When his helmsman, Palinurus, is thrown overboard because he has fallen asleep, snared by self-indulgence, Aeneas divines that the ship of human life is swerving from its course. On his own initiative, he seizes the rudder of duty, and, through a long night of error, sweats at the helmsman's task. He does not scorn the labor, though such toil ill befits a mighty hero, because he assumes responsibility for the safety of many. Aeneas then passes in review the punishments of Avernus (that is, the miseries of the world) and observes what ills beset infancy, youth, and every other age. He visits Elysium too, where his father Anchises is seen with others, but only such as are good and upright men, at leisure for God and literature, while they abide in this life and enjoy tranquillity. Then, before he attains to promised rest in Latium, he meets his enemy, Turnus, that is, the devil. The Latins, which is to say worldliness, wage war. Strife is had over Lavinia, who is to be interpreted as the soul. But Turnus is worsted, the Latins are put down, Lavinia is won. Aeneas rules at peace in Italy and finally is made a god. This is the reward, this the goal, for the persevering hero.

With such a view of the Aeneid as an allegory requiring moral completeness, it is no wonder that an ardent youth, in an age when, for sheer love of the epic, children learned it by heart, should have superimposed upon the artistic completeness of Virgil's poem his own enthusiastic version of the heavenly reward. The surprising fact is not that a Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid was composed, but that it should have had so long a history.

Publication.—The earliest manuscript of Vegius' canto, perhaps an autograph, is entitled "Libri XII Aeneidos Supplementum (Papiae VI idus Octobris 1428)."⁷⁸ A whole generation intervened between this date and the introduction of printing into Italy. Vegius could never have imagined the wide popularity that was in store for the Virgilian tribute of his gay secular youth in Pavia. He died a cleric, Canon of Saint Peter's, in 1458, six years before the German presses of Sweynheym and Pannartz were housed in the venerable religious house at Subiaco among the Sabine hills. Just six years after those first memorable experiments and only two years later than the production of the editio princeps of Virgil (1469), the "Supplementum" was linked with the Aeneid in the edition of 1471 printed from the types of Adam de Ambergau at Venice. From this time on, it was broadcast over Europe. It appeared in more than twenty Venetian editions, as well as in Virgils printed at Rome, Milan, Florence, Modena, Brescia, Turin, and Pavia. More than half a dozen Paris publications contain it, and more than a dozen printed in London. It was three times reprinted at Basle, and at least once each at Antwerp, Cologne, Nuremburg, Strassburg, and Zurich.⁷⁹

As early as 1500, however, its prestige in learned circles showed symptoms of decline. Among cultivated judges the taste for allegory had yielded to modern literary appreciation. In 1505 Aldus Manutius published an edition of Virgil from which he would gladly have omitted the "Supplementum," but he included it in deference to popular demand, with the apology that he "still had to make this concession."⁸⁰ Nine years later, in a dedicatory letter to Cardinal Bembo which precedes his beautiful edition of 1514, he proudly writes, "In this edition you will find nothing which can detract from the majesty of the divine poet," and Vegius' "Supplement" is here omitted.

⁷⁸ L. Raffaele, Maffeo Vegio (Bologna, 1909), page 83.

⁷⁹ W. A. Copinger, Incunabula Virgiliana, Transactions of the Bibliographical Society, 1894, Volume II, Part 2.

⁸⁰ A. Firmin Didot, Alde Manuce et L'Hellénisme à Venise (Paris, 1875, page 283.

Yet it is to this same generation that Brant's captivating woodcuts (1502) belong, and a decade later Bishop Gavin Douglas was composing his vivid version of "The Threttene Buik" in the Scottish tongue. There was still amazing vitality in the reputation of a work which could call forth such echoes of genius from distant lands.

The explanation of the double phenomenon, loss of favor with the learned and unimpaired popularity with the public, is not far to seek. European printing-presses had unlocked the inheritance of literature to "men onletteryt," as Bishop Douglas terms them. The appetite for allegory was as yet unassuaged. As so often happens, a change of attitude on the part of intellectuals preceded, by a century or more, a corresponding alteration of popular taste. "The Thirteenth Book" was illustrated, as it was translated, in response to a popular craving. It continued to accompany the Aeneid in most of the editions published in Europe and Britain until 1650.

Criticism.—Contemporary and subsequent criticism bears additional testimony to the sustained popularity shown by frequent reprinting. Valla considered Vegius the best contemporary poet, and Filelfo spoke of him as "alter Maro."⁸¹ Many literary critics and biographers are effusive in their praise. Vespasiano da Bisticci writes in his artless fashion: "So skilled was Maffeo Veggio in verse that he added with the greatest ease a thirteenth book to Virgil's Aeneid, which was greatly praised by all the learned men of the time."⁸² Paulus Cortesius⁸³ is slightly skeptical. He says Vegius "was then accounted a poet, and he does show talent, but his style is sometimes exaggerated, and it is not refined enough, though this particular fault is characteristic of the age." Lilius Gyraldus⁸⁴ lists him with such prominent poets as Panormitanus and Aurispa. Paulus Jovius⁸⁵ finds him a truly Homeric bard and sets him above all other Latin writers in the preceding two hun-

⁸¹ L. Raffaele, Maffeo Veggio (Bologna, 1909), page 46.

⁸² Vespasiano da Bisticci, Vite (Florence, 1859), Vita di Maffeo Veggio.

⁸³ P. Cortesius, De hominibus doctis (Florence, 1734), page 16.

⁸⁴ L. G. Gyraldus, De poetis nostrorum temporum, published in Lateinische Literatur Denkmaler des XV und XVI Jahrhunderts, Berlin, 1895.

⁸⁵ P. Jovius, Elogia (Basle, 1577), number 196.

dred years, not excepting Petrarch, "though he was crowned with laurel on the capitol." Julius Caesar Scaliger⁸⁶ (1484-1558) says, "grandis profecto poeta est." He devotes a whole section of his Hypercriticus (Book VI of the "Poetics") to Mapheus Vegius, "so conspicuously does he stand out in that century in which scarcely any good literature flourished." "Although he is despised," continues Scaliger, "by my best and most learned instructors, I shall quote a few distinguished verses from the Supplement which he added to Virgil's divine poem . . ." With that he quotes the opening lines of the "Thirteenth Book" and adds "here you find traces of Virgil's brilliance. With the exception of the word revomentes, all the rest is worthy of a consummate poet." He remarks upon two similes which he ranks as "not inferior to those of Lucan and Statius, perhaps even better." In all, seven passages are quoted and commented upon with obvious relish.

A hundred years later Vegius' praise is sung in Northern Europe as well. Gerardus Johannes Vossius⁸⁷ (1577-1649), the celebrated Dutch "polyhistor" and professor of eloquence at Leyden, evaluates him as the best poet between Petrarch and the graceful bard and Lucretian critic, Jovianus Pontanus (1426-1503).

Olaus Borrichius (1626-1690), whose homelier Danish name was Olaf von Borch, renowned physician of Queen Christina's court, finds him worthy of notice, though far removed from Virgil.⁸⁸

Laelius Brisciola links Vegius' name with that of Quintus of Smyrna as author of a work which is "injudicious and inartistic."⁸⁹ Juan Luigi de la Cerda (ca. 1560-1645), a learned Jesuit of Madrid, in his monumental Virgil (1608-1617) writes with old-fashioned sympathy: "Maphei Vegi in supplemento Vergiliano opus laude est dignum, si versus spectes, quia multi ad umbram Maronis et modulum"; but he goes on to criticize the imputation that the Aeneid lacks completeness. Charles de la Rue, also of the Society of Jesus, more often called ⁸⁶ J. C. Scaliger, Poetices libri septem (Heidelberg, 1581, second edition), page 785.

⁸⁷ G. J. Vossius, De veterum poetarum temporibus, Amsterdam, 1697.

⁸⁸ Olaus Borrichius, Dissertationes academicae de poetis (Frankfurt, 1683), page 107.

⁸⁹ Udeno Nisiely da Vernio, Proginnasmi poetici (Florence, 1620), III, 102.

Ruaeus (1643–1725), expresses the same opinion in an essay De natura Aeneidos disquisitio.⁹⁰ Tarquinius Gallutius (1514–1549), rector of the college of Greeks in Rome, compares Vegius⁹¹ to a wheelwright who looks at a coach, complete in every part, and thinks its four strong wheels are not enough, so he sets about adding a wretched fifth of his own make.

Abbé Claude-Pierre Gouget (1697–1767) writes pleasantly in a mood less stern: “What Vegius did for his own amusement has pleased many others. Though his little poem is far from its model, it has charms that give it value.”⁹² Henry Hallam (1777–1859) says in his Literature of Europe during the Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventeenth Centuries that Maphaeus Vegius’ “Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid” is “probably the best versification before Politian.”⁹³

The day of Virgilian allegory had, by this time, definitely passed. The intellectual climate of Europe had changed. For a few years scholars were vociferous in their denunciation and ridicule of the allegorical interpretation; then that phase of Virgil’s influence, and with it Maphaeus Vegius’ “Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid,” passed to the realm of historical interest.

Badius Ascensius’ commentary.—In 1500, Erasmus’ friend, the erudite French printer and editor, Iodocus Badius Ascensius, produced an elaborate and long-lived commentary for the “Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid”⁹⁴ so that it need no longer stand unilluminated after the richly annotated pages of the Aeneid.

Virgil’s text had, in the space of thirty years since the editio princeps (1469), become literally embedded in scholia. It was a fashion of early printers to combine a number of commentaries without assuming the function of editor to fuse them into a unit. In 1500 five commentators, Servius (born ca. 355), Donatus (fl. ca. 333), Landinus

⁹⁰ C. Ruaeus, Virgilii Opera, III, 755.

⁹¹ T. Gallutius, Orationes tres de Vergilii allegoria, page 246.

⁹² Claude-Pierre Gouget, Bibliothèque française (Paris, 1742), V, 195. Quoted by N. E. Lemaire, Virgilii Opera, Paris, 1820.

⁹³ Part 2, chapter iii.

⁹⁴ T. Kerver, Virgilii Opera, Paris, 1500.

(1424-1504), Mancinellus (1452-1506), and Calderinus (1447-1478) were the five accepted worthies who usually expounded Virgil's text. By 1600 the list had been more than doubled by the addition of Pomponius Laetus (1425-1475), Beroaldus (1453-1505), Barlandus (1488-1542), Vives (1492-1540), Fabricius (1516-1571), and others.

Badius is not deceived regarding the intrinsic merit of his author, of whom he says: "Granted that he does imitate the poet and that he follows at a great distance and is cold in comparison, still we cannot all do everything, and it is easier to notice defects than to write without them." In a later comment he writes in more appreciative vein: "non est tamen usquequaque contemnenda poeta, si seorsum solusque inspicia-tur, quamvis nihil ad Maronem." Badius heads his notes with the modest catchword, "Ascensiani Adnotatiunculi." His observations exhibit no remarkable penetration. They consist largely of summaries or paraphrases, citations of sources, and indications of a few glaring faults and discrepancies.

Translation and parody in Great Britain.—After 1500 the enormously increased circulation of books produced a reading public so extensive and so little correlated with the citizens of the old Republic of Letters, in which Latin was the universal language, that translations of great and standard works were required in all the languages of Europe.

The earliest and most picturesque version of "The Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid" was composed by Master Gavin Douglas (ca. 1474-1522), Bishop of Dunkeld, who completed his Virgil in the Scottish tongue, the most famous of his writings, and today the greatest monument of old Scottish poetry, in 1513. This was the first metrical translation of any classical author by a British scholar.⁹⁵

Sir Walter Scott describes the learned bishop in the sixth canto (ll. 327-335) of Marmion:

A bishop by the altar stood,
A noble lord of Douglas blood,

⁹⁵ H. Palmer, "Handlist of English Editions and Translations of Greek and Latin Classics before 1641," Bibliographical Society Publications, Volume XII, 1911.

With mitre sheen and rochet white
 Yet showed his meek and thoughtful eye
 But little pride of prelacy:
 More pleased that in a barbarous age
 He gave rude Scotland Virgil's page
 Than that beneath his rule he held
 The bishopric of fair Dunkeld.

Sir David Lindsay of the Mount (ca. 1531– ca. 1613), in his Complaynt of Papingo (ll. 33–36) alludes to Douglas' Virgil as composed in "our Inglis"; he continues:

And specialy the trew translatioun
 Of Virgill, quhilk bin consolatioun
 To cunning men, to knaw his great ingyne,
 Als weill in natural science as diuynie.

As to the accuracy of the translation, the learned Francis Junius, or François du Jon (1589–1677), an exacting philologist, complains in his Glossarium Gothicum:

In my perusing of this Prelate his book . . . I stumbled on manie passages wherein this wittie Gawin doth grossly mistake Virgil, and is much led out of the way by the infection of a monkish ignorance then prevailing in church and commonwealth.

There are, to be sure, instances of misinterpretation due to meager academic equipment, and there is diffuseness due to the prevalent literary fashion. Occasional anachronisms provoke a smile. One of these occurs in the spirited lines in Book VI in which the Sibyl, who is represented as a "nwn," exhorts Aeneas to tell his beads:

Blyn nocht, blyn nocht: thou gret Troiane Enee
 Of thi bedis nor of thi prayeris, quod sche.

Blyn is from the verb blinnan, "to cease."

On the whole, however, John Lesley (1527–1596), Bishop of Ross, is justified in praising Bishop Gavin for his "fragrant wit and singular erudition." His Virgil gave delight to young and old.

The reverend "Father in God," Gavin Douglas, was well aware that the right of "The Thirteenth Book" to cap the climax of the Aeneid had been challenged; and he, like Aldus Manutius in Venice, contemplated omitting it from his magnum opus. He feelingly describes the welcome sense of emancipation which he experienced when, after months of toil, he completed his arduous task of translation, "every book having its particular prologue." His preface to "The Thirteenth Book" recounts in picturesque Scottish verse the manner in which he was persuaded to add this apocrypha to the accepted canon of Virgil. In summer heat, during the joyous "month time of June," when supper was done, he walked forth into the fields. Cattle and birds and busy bees were all aſtir to proceed to their night's reſt. Down ſank the ſun all burning red, and Hesper roſe, "forerider of the night." The beauty of the fruitful earth was ſhadowed o'er with darkneſs. Now every other thing both great and ſmall was ſtill, when Philomel, "the merry nightingale," began her ſong, and, longing to hear the "mirthful notes," the biſhop ſat him down beneath a laurel tree "now muſing upon this and now on that" and gazing at the ſtars he fell aſleep. Soon he heard a voice that ſaid: "What doſt thou here, under my tree, and willeſt me no good." Up looked the Biſhop from beneath his cowl and he beheld an aged man, ſtern as a phyſician, in a ſtrange and threadbare habit reaching to the ground. Upon his head he wore a laurel crown like to a poet of the olden time. The Biſhop ſpoke to him with reverence:

"Father, if I have done you any offence I ſhall make amends ſo far as in me lies. And yet, as I have never ſeen you heretofore, I would fain know when, how or where I have trespaſſed againſt you?" "'Tis well thou cryeſt for mercy," quoth the other. "Knoweſt thou not Mapheus Vegius, the poet that added unto Virgillis luſty bukiſ ſwete the threttene buke? I am the ſame, and I bear thee no good will in that thou haſt rendered into thine own language the other twelve ſo that they may be read and ſung all over Albion's iſle, but of mine, thou haſt taken no heed."

The Biſhop answered him:

"I hear your words and ſeek your pardon, not that I have done you wrong, but I have overſpent my time on Virgil's volume. If I longer laid aſide my preſſing tasks, what would folk think? Believe me, Father, there be thoſe who hold that your book adds no more than doth a fifth wheel to a cart, and, ſince you be a Christian man, I pray you, let it suffice that Virgil now is at an end. A scruple irks me that I have dwelt so long upon a gentile's book."

"Ha, son!" quoth he, "wouldst thou escape me thus, why shrinkest thou from my short Christian work, and, since we speak of poetry, both mine and Virgil's are of moral tone. Lend me a fortnight, or, by my father's soul, thou shalt regret that ever thou didst Virgil know." With that he drew me from my seat and laid about him with his club, belaboring me with twenty blows while I cried "Deo! Deo! Mercy on me," and, with my right hand high upstretched, swore to translate his book, in honor of God and his apostles twelve "in the number odd." Glad at my words, he took me by the hand, then went away, and I awoke in fear. Lo! then upsprang the brilliant dawn of day that to behold was pleasant and half marvel.

"Belyve on weyng the bissy lark vpsprang,
To salus the blyth morrow with hir sang."

Then thought I thus, "I shall my promise keep, made thus to the poet master Maphaeus, and complete the book that I may then attend to my grave matters. For, though his style be not like that of Virgil, full well I know many shall like my text. My tongue and pen shall be the same, and this suffices common folk. Let wise men know the poets different."

The second important British version of the whole Aeneid and Maphaeus Vegius' "Thirteenth Book" was mainly the work of Thomas Phaer, M.D. (1510-1560). Shortly before his death he completed the first nine books and a third of the tenth in the old ballad meter called "fourteeners." He signed them with the pathetic legend "Thomas Phaer olim tuus, nunc Dei." His epitaph by Barnabe Googe (1540-1594), best known as the translator of Marcellus Palingenius' "Zodyake of Lyfe," was published in a collection entitled Eglogs, Epytaphes, and Sonnettes, 1563. This singular composition supplies the curious reader with a detailed survey of the status of Virgilian translation in England about the year 1560.

AN EPYTAPHE OF MAISTER THOMAS PHAYRE

The hawtie verse that Maro wrote, made Rome to wonder much,
And mervayle none; for why? the style and waightynes was suche,
That all men judged Parnassus mount had clefte her selfe in twayne,
And brought forth one that seemd to drop from out Minervae's brayne.

But wonder more may Bryttayne great, when Phayre dyd florysh late,
 And barreyne tong with swete accord reduced to such estate,
 That Virgil's verse had greater grace, in forrayne foote obtaynde,
 Than in his own, who, whilst he lyved, eche other poet staynde.
 The noble H. Hawarde once,⁹⁶ that raught eternall fame,
 With mighty style did bryng a pece of Virgil's worke in frame.
 And Grimoald gave the lyke attempt,⁹⁷ and Douglas wan the ball,⁹⁸
 For famous wyt in Scottysh ryme, had made an ende of all.
 But all these same did Phayre excell, I dare presume to wryte,
 As much as doth Apolloe's beames the dymmeſt ſtarre in lyght.
 The envious fates (O pytie great!) had great disdayne to see,
 That us amongſt there ſhuld remayne ſo fine a wyt as he;
 And, in the mydſt of all his toyle, dyd force hym hence to wende,
 And leave a Worke imperfyt ſo, that never man ſhall ende.

Thomas Twyne, M.D., (1543–1613) took up the translation in the tenth book, and published in 1583 and 1584

The XIII Bookes of Aeneidos. The firſt twelve beeing the woorke of the divine Poet Virgil Maro, and the thirteenth, the Supplement of Maphaeus Vegius. Translated into English verſe to the fyrſt third part of the tenth Booke, by Thomas Phaer, Eſquire, and the residue finiſhed, and ſet forth for the delite of ſuch as are ſtudious in Poetrie: By Thomas Twyne, Doctör of Phyſicke. Imprinted at London by William How, for Abraham Veale, dwelling in Paules Church yeard, at the ſign of the Lambe.

Phaer's ſtyle has more ſpirit and zeſt than that of Twyne, but an old-time quaintneſs of phraſe and ſpelling prevents Thomas Twyne's concluſion of the work from being dull reading.

In the whole ſixteenth century, hardly more than ten Latin authors were translated into English, and theſe were, in the main, repreſented by very ſmall portions of their work. For this reaſon the two complete

⁹⁶ Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey (1517[?]-1547). His translation was publiſhed in London, 1557, with the title Certain bokes of Virgiles Aenaeis turned into English meter by the right noble lorde, Henry Earle of Surrey.

⁹⁷ Nicholas Grimoald (1519-1562) made a Latin proſe paraphraſe of Virgil's Georgics entitled Maronis quattuor libros Georgicorum in ſoluta paraphraſis elegantissima, Oxonii in Aede Chriſti. Eduardi ſexti ſecundo confeſta, London, 1591.

⁹⁸ Translation completed 1513, publiſhed 1553.

Aeneids, that of Douglas (1513), and Phaer and Twyne (1583), have a unique importance.⁹⁹ Toward the end of the century North's famous Plutarch and Marlowe's Ovid vie with them in prominence. It was, however, almost a century before the main body of Greek and Latin literature became available to the English public.

An extraordinary cento was published by Alexander Rose or Ross (1590-1654), schoolmaster of Southampton, later chaplain of King Charles I, at London in 1638. It bears the title, Vergilii Evangelisantis Christiados libri XIII. In quibus omnia quae de Domino nostro Iesu Christo in utroque Testamento, vel dicta vel praedicta sunt, Altisona Divina Maronis tuba suavissime dicuntur. Alexander Ross's name occurs in a couplet in Butler's Hudibras, Part I, Canto II.

There was an ancient sage philosopher
That had read Alexander Ross over.

Some direct influence of this Virgilian cento is said to appear in the poems of John Milton.¹⁰⁰ The number of its books is of course due to the commonly accepted number of the books of the Aeneid, including the thirteenth. The "Thirteen" recalls the odd phrase of Bishop Gavin Douglas about the full tale of books in his version of the Aeneid, which he completed "in honor of God and his apostles twelve in the number odd."

The French translation of Virgil's poems by L. des Masures (Masurius), a work planned by Cardinal du Bellay, was reprinted in Paris in 1577 with Le trezième livre de l'Eneide traduit de Latin en François, by Pierre de Mouchauld. The style is antiquated and crabbed.

When allegory had run its course, burlesque came in vogue to pique men's jaded appetites. The seventeenth century saw the publication of an anonymous Hudibrastic satire in the form of a parody upon Maphaeus Vegius' "Thirteenth Book." It came from the pen of a certain John Ellis (1698-1791), the last representative of the profession called "scriveners." The parody bears an interesting metrical title.

⁹⁹ H. Palmer, "List of English Editions and Translations of Greek and Latin Classics before 1641," Bibliographical Society Publications, Volume XII, 1911.

¹⁰⁰ G. A. Aitken, "Alexander Ross," Dictionary of National Biography (London, 1897), Volume XLIX.

The canto added by Maphaeus
To Virgil's twelve books of Aeneis
From the original bombastic
Done into English Hudibrastic
With notes beneath and Latin text
To every other page annexed.

James Boswell¹⁰¹ throws a pleasant light upon the author of this odd production, who also translated Ovid's epistles in "a very pretty way." He says (alluding to Dr. Samuel Johnson):

I remember he once observed to me, "It is wonderful, Sir, what is to be found in London. The most literary conversation that I ever enjoyed was at the table of Jack Ellis, a money scrivener behind the Royal Exchange, with whom I at one period used to dine—generally once a week."

The next version of Vegius' "Thirteenth Book" comes from Ireland from the pen of Mary Leadbeater (1758–1826), Dublin, 1808. Her brother's son, Richard Shackleton, had made an English prose version, which she turned into heroic couplets. This poem inclines to dullness, though some of Mrs. Leadbeater's verses are lively and melodious. Her poetic gift was well thought of by Edmund Burke, who was her father's pupil. In 1864, Cavaliere Giorgio Tornielli translated the Aeneid into Italian verse. In 1874, he added the "Thirteenth Book" under the title, "Canto di Maffeo Vegio da Lodi a supplemento dell' Eneide."

T. Seymour Burt, struck with a statement in Lamprière's Classical Dictionary about "the unfinished state of the Aeneid which exercised the talents of Maphaeus Vegius in the fifteenth century," tried to find a copy of the "Thirteenth Book" and happened upon Mary Leadbeater's metrical version, which is printed on alternate pages with the original Latin text. The "Thirteenth Book" by Vegius did not seem to him to have supplied the deficiency noted by Lamprière and commented upon by Davidson in a note on the last line of his English translation of Virgil's Book XII; so Burt looked up material in the first book of Livy's History for a possible "Fourteenth Book." This he found in chapters III to XVI. He rendered the prose narrative into English blank verse and offered it as a sequel, so that, to quote his own words, if any scholar, who may feel himself equal to the task, should be willing to tax his powers by making Latin hexameters in continuation of the "Prince of Poets" work, he need only to take up Livy's Latin text . . . to transpose it . . . for it is almost poetry already, the first two lines forming nearly complete hexameters—and a perfect narrative will be arrived at in that measure down to the death of Romulus, whom I conceive to have been the last descendant of the Aeneadae.

¹⁰¹ Boswell, Johnson, edited by J. B. Hill, III, 24.

The book appeared in 1883 with the title, "The Aeneid, Georgics, and Eclogues of Virgil rendered into English blank verse; together with others of his poems, not hitherto translated; to which are appended Maphaeus Vegius' Book XIII, a supplement to the Aeneid, as well as material proposed for a Book XIV to the same by T. Seymour Burt, F.R.S., M.R.A.A., etc."

VIRGIL'S GREATEST ILLUSTRATOR AND "THE THIRTEENTH BOOK"

Virgil's greatest illustrator was the humorist and humanist, Sebastian Brant, who flourished in the old Rhine cities of Basle and Strassburg at the close of the fifteenth century. He was one of the most-talked-of men in Europe, largely because he never forgot that all the world loves a picture book. He found time, in the intervals of a successful career as jurist, teacher, poet, student, administrator, and friend of princes, to lay before the shining eyes of his younger and older contemporaries no less than six consummate picture books. His famous Virgil of 1502 has been appropriately called "one of the most wonderful illustrated books ever produced."¹⁰²

After 1450, when the art of printing made possible the multiplication of volumes less expensive than the gorgeous codices illuminated by monastic scribes, printers and readers still hankered after books that were beautiful and pictorial. Under the stimulus of popular demand, the rude planks of pear or cherry wood that had served as stamps for printing playing cards evolved within a single generation into the matchless wood blocks of Albrecht Dürer. Monochrome decoration stressed composition and design, and from the first the old prints had rare decorative quality. The fifteenth-century public was fastidious. To its nicety we owe the fact that the earliest printed books are not infrequently the handsomest. The best was none too good for connoisseurs whose taste was formed by quattrocento manuscripts. Bright boys still thought of penmanship as a possible profession, and the printer must produce a product which could hold its own in comparison with exquisite handiwork.

¹⁰² G. R. Redgrave, "Illustrated Books by Sebastian Brant," Bibliographica (London, 1896), Volume II.

Sebastian Brant's first important picture book was the notorious Narrenschiff or "Ship of Fools," that tweaked old Europe by the nose with coarse and caustic jest in 1494. The volume was a quarto, alive with woodcuts, and diversified by handsome borders designed in the Italian style. It is quite impossible to say who drew the first sketches for these prints. How much Brant had to do with them is a riddle that cannot be answered until, in a fortunate moment, some old letter or memorandum comes to light with intimate details. Many hints from the Basle woodcuts were later elaborated in Brant's Strassburg books, and it seems not at all unlikely that his hand as well as his heart was involved in their design.

The same year, 1494, or possibly the later months of 1493, witnessed the publication of a booklet, now extremely rare, which was edited by Sebastian Brant and prefaced by him with a foreword in Latin couplets. This tiny pamphlet contains a play on the capture of Granada and an illustrated text of Columbus' letter to the Crown Treasurer of Aragon announcing his great discovery. Its eight woodcuts were revamped from an earlier Basle edition of the letter. The story of the "Admiral of the Ocean Fleet" captivated the imagination of Europe. The "grave and pious" Columbus became the typical Renaissance discoverer, as Aeneas had been the voyager par excellence of all antiquity. It is not surprising to find that when Brant edited his famous Virgil at Strassburg he used Columbus' caravels as patterns for

Aeneas' ships. To Brant, as to his readers, Aeneas' western voyage was fraught with all the intense significance of Columbus' journey, the greatest event in that age of geographic discovery.¹⁰³

Brant next concocted a scheme for bringing his favorite Roman poets to the notice of the prosperous citizens of Basle, who were rather prosy people, more interested in trade and household comfort than they were in books. He selected striking quotations and captivating epigrams, which he decorated in black and white with quaint intriguing designs. These broadsides he distributed to the men of his acquaintance. One can fancy a stout, velvet-coated burgher, seated before his substantial breakfast, scanning a bon mot from Ovid as he sipped his mug of beer.

With similar ardor Brant's pupil, Jacob Locher of Ingolstadt, and a "prudent and honest" printer, Johann Grüninger by name, were engaged at Strassburg on a series of illustrated classics. A Terence appeared in 1496, a Horace in 1498. Block prints, variously combined from a limited selection of male and female figures, trees, and houses, decorate these editions. Each contains, in addition to the composite prints, a single magnificent symbolic design, which serves the purpose of a modern title-page. The convenient convention of the title-page did not become fixed in European printing till twenty years later.

In 1500 Brant moved to Strassburg under appointment of his admired patron, the Emperor Maximilian I, as syndic and imperial chancellor of his native city. His controlling influence first appears in the third volume of the Strassburg series, the Boethius of 1501. Here, instead of combined pictures, such as had graced the Terence and the Horace, the elaborate illustrations are cut on single blocks. In some instances, successive stages of narrative are indicated by a series of compartments. These are arranged like a triptich, with the main episode in the center, or in a sequence like the modern comic strip.

The next year saw the publication of the crowning volume of the series, the Virgil of 1502, a handsome folio, crowded with vivacious woodcuts, large and small, in which "the capriceful fancy of the artist”¹⁰⁴ links Roman mythology arm in arm with medieval Christian symbolism. In his prefatory epigram Brant explains that this book is intended for the general rather than the scholarly reader.

¹⁰³ A. C. Brinton, "The Ships of Columbus in Brant's Virgil," Art and Archaeology, September, 1928. .

Virgilium exponant alii sermone deserto,
Et calamo pueris; tradere et ore iuvet,
Pictura agresti voluit Brant; atque tabellis;
Edere cum indoctis; rusticolisque viris,
Nec tamen abiectis labor hic; nec prorsus inanis,
Nam memori servat mente figura librum.

Dr. Henry states the whole case for these woodcuts in his own quaint language, when he says, “There is no one of them, let it only be rightly read, that is not in accord with some unseen vibrating fibril of the human heart.”¹⁰⁵ Earlier editors had imbedded Virgil’s text in an unwieldy mass of notes; Brant preserved this time-honored apparatus, while he lighted up the pages with a picture commentary designed to stimulate, not the pedantic instincts, but the imagination of his readers. On the title-page he says of his pictures

Has tibi nemo ante hac tam plane ostenderat usquam:
Nemo tibi voluit pingere Virgilium.
Nunc memorare potes monochromata cuncta Maronis
Quam leviter: pictis lector amice locis.

Three aspects of the Aeneid made irresistible appeal to the sympathetic illustrator. First and foremost, he delighted to portray the lust of battle, stormed cities, heads impaled on pikes, single combat, and funeral pyres. To the eye of gentle Virgil every one of these designs would have borne the imprint of horrid barbarity. Next he reveled in the grace and mystery of ships, as he wove the pattern of Columbus’ galleons into vigorous nautical designs of storm and fair weather. Finally, here on the threshold of the northern Renaissance, that was never really a Renaissance at all in the Italian sense of the word, but rather a Reformation, medieval courtoisie softens the bloody chronicle of conflict into a romance of chivalry.

¹⁰⁴ J. Noel Humphreys, A History of the Art of Printing (London, 1868), page 175.

¹⁰⁵ James Henry, Aeneidea (Dublin, 1878), Volume I, Introduction, page 1x.

The designer of these prints is possessed by a veritable horror vacui. There must be no blank spots on his paper, and no episode in his author's narrative can be ignored by the conscientious commentator. This explains the presence of little supplementary scenes in many of the cuts, portraying events earlier or later than the main subject, tucked away in sky or landscape spaces like the determinatives in Egyptian hieroglyphics. In this unique way the artist has added to his three dimensions of space a fourth dimension of time.

Six elaborate woodcuts, worthy of the most minute and attentive observation, illustrate "The Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid." There is no let-down in style from the Virgil pictures; Brant, Locher, and Grüninger were inspired by Vegius' narrative to design their picture commentary on the same attractive and sumptuous scale as their illustrations to Virgil's twelve books.

DESCRIPTION OF BRANT'S WOODCUTS

Plate I.—Brant's first illustration of the Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid quaintly synthesizes the incidents of the initial sixty lines of the poem. Lists for single combat, Turnus slain, enemy lances struck into the ground in token of surrender, these are the horizontal and vertical lines that rivet our attention. A nimble squire has removed the jeweled baldric of young prince Pallas, Evander's son, from the fallen foe. Aeneas, in kingly armor of the pattern worn in 1500 with a crown that belongs to the same period of European headdress, lifts his right hand in the ancient gesture which for Roman orator and feudal lord bespoke attention. The unarmed Latins also raise their hands with the third and fourth finger folded to the palm. This is analogous to the medieval "manuevatio," the sign of a solemn pledge. Behind on the left are the defeated Rutuli still armed, but bringing their weapons to add to the breastplates, helmets, and battle axes surrendered by the Latins. Near by is a suggestion of the burial of the dead.

Troia, which is Aeneas' camp, and the city of Laurentum fill the background. There are round, weather-vaned towers like those on the old wall of Strassburg and steep, concave roofs like those of the city within, as they are depicted in an almost contemporary print from Scheidels Chronik, 1493. Above the wall of Troia is a small design which might appear obscure were it not that the same object is more distinctly drawn in Plate III. A slab of marble supported by four short pillars forms an altar of sacrifice. Flames are rising to heaven from a burnt offering in token of gratitude to the gods for Aeneas' victory.

Plate II.—The center of thought and feeling in the second picture is the unadorned, but impressive coffin, on which is inscribed the one word "Turnus." Everything else, and the woodcut abounds in detail, is subordinated to the one idea, "Turnus is dead." Latinus, garbed as befitted an aged king in the great days of Brant's ideal monarch, the Emperor Maximilian I, stands at his palace gate with kerchief in hand to check his rising tears. The edifice is a noble pile dominated by two massive towers, one square, the other round, that bear a distinct resemblance to the square and round towers of the Church of Saint Thomas, one of the oldest buildings in Strassburg, as it appeared about the year 1500.

The cavalier Metiscus in handsome armor, with slashed sleeves, riding on a richly caparisoned horse, commands a guard of honor represented by three young knights with down-turned lances, weapons which in happier days would have borne the bannerets of Turnus fluttering at their points. In such mournful pomp the procession takes its way from Laurentum toward Ardea, which is first represented by towers and battlements in the upper left-hand corner and later by a fire-swept hill in the center background. Trouble is heaped on trouble for Daunus the aged king. A terrific fire demolishes his once-prosperous city. Its fortifications and homes are reduced to ashes, either because the gods have so willed or because prophetic fates give this grim foreboding of Turnus' death. As the city writhes in final agony, its spirit, transformed into the bird Ardea, rises on beating pinions from the embers. King Daunus has scarcely made his way outside the burning walls when Rumor accosts him, in the form of a messenger, with tidings that a funeral train is drawing near, bearing his dead son Turnus.

Plate III.—The embassy of a thousand heroes sent by King Latinus to Aeneas, the conqueror, to bespeak favor and offer the hand of princess Lavinia in marriage is gracefully suggested by five armored horsemen gaily wreathed with ivy. Even their horses' tails carry out the festive impression by decorative curves. Aeneas in a new corselet, wearing on his head a massive combination of turban and coronet, which can be closely paralleled among the Innsbruck statues, with a huge sword in his right hand, strides forth from Troia's gate to welcome the cavalcade, whose leader is Drances, famed for his much speaking. The illustrator does not allow us to forget, however, that this cheerful scene follows after carnage. In the lower left-hand corner two corpses are burning on a funeral pyre, and in the upper right a stately priest (perhaps Aeneas himself in changed robes) offers thanks to heaven for victory.

Plate IV.—The fourth illustration is a play in two acts, the arrival of the bridegroom and the wedding. In the foreground Aeneas, Ascanius, and two young squires, who have crossed the bridge from their stronghold on the upper left, are standing before the palace gate of Laurentum. King Latinus with two royal attendants welcomes them in courteous wise. For our further edification the engraver has constructed an open pavilion on a higher level of the palace on the right. Here is depicted the marriage of Aeneas and Lavinia. Oddly enough Aeneas stands at the priest's left side and Lavinia at his right, an arrangement unparalleled except in Raphael's famous picture of the marriage of the Virgin Mary. Probably the engraver neglected to notice that his design would be reversed in the printing. Lavinia's striped headdress in this and the following plate is almost exactly duplicated in Hans Holbein's portrait of the wife of the Burgomaster Jacob Meyer in the museum at Basle.

Plate V.—The fifth woodcut in Brant's series (reproduced as the frontispiece of this volume) is perhaps the most attractive of the series from artistic and dramatic points of view. In a handsome setting of Gothic arches and tall, slender windows, with one pane of bull's-eyes characteristically open to admit a modicum of air, noble Aeneas and his bride Lavinia, who rests her left hand affectionately upon her husband's arm, old Latinus, and the precocious, attractive boy Ascanius are seated at a table richly spread. A peacock, with feathers successfully reset after baking, crowns the feast. The handsome medieval salt-cellar represents the "crater" which King Priam gave to Father Anchises and which Achates was sent to fetch as a bridal gift. To the music of pipe and drum a dapper youth and a fashionable lady lead the dance, "variantque pedes, raptimque feruntur."

In the background, among idyllic rocks where Aeneas is founding his new city, the heavenly sanction of the earthly wedlock is symbolically portrayed. A flame shoots up from Lavinia's head, and Aeneas stretches out his hands and prays in a loud voice to Jupiter to confirm the omen of the halo of light. As he speaks, his goddess mother stands beside him with a prophecy of present joy and future peace, of a progeny that shall fill the world with honor, and, finally, of Aeneas' own ascension into heaven.

Plate VI.—The last of this series of woodcuts is the most bizarre of them all, with its pagan stars for Christian fig leaves and the quaint contrast between the heavy German costumes of the year of grace 1500 in which the mortals are arrayed and the complete absence of all raiment for the Roman deities. It bears witness to the incongruous ingredients of northern humanism.

A masterly description of this picture has been bequeathed us by the most singular of Virgil's critics, the Irish physician, James Henry, who retired from his medical practice to devote his life to the study of his favorite author. Dr. Henry appears not to have seen Brant's original woodcut, but an inferior copy in the Juntine edition, Venice, 1537, had come to his attention. He says:

Turn back as far as the woodcut on the verso of the last folio but one of Maphaeus Vegius's "Thirteenth Book"—ingeniously platted queue of Virgilian centos, which in this, as in some other old editions, has been pinned to, and hangs dangling from, the Aeneis—and observe above, on your left hand, Lavinia, Ascanius, a third person (perhaps Achates), and the city of Lavinium: in the right-hand corner, sceptred Jupiter throned on clouds, as firm to all appearance as rocks, and Venus embracing his knees and reminding him of his promise that Aeneas should be translated to heaven: below, in the right-hand corner, Latinus stretched dead on an elevated bier: the crowned head supported on a cushion, the hands crossed, the upper half of the person naked. The lower half covered with a pall carefully folded back at the upper border, and descending, at the foot and on both sides, to the very ground: Still lower down, the river Numicus, with a luxuriant typha in the midst, occupying the foreground: in the left-hand corner,—corner alike of picture and river—Venus and Aeneas: Aeneas in the extreme corner on the water's edge, stretched on his back, dead, with his hands crossed, and only a swathe around his loins: Venus above her knees in the water just touching with both hands Aeneas's left shoulder, as if about to push or pull him, or as if, having pushed or pulled him so far out of the water, she does not know what step to take next. No, I beg pardon: the goddess is in no such difficulty; carry Aeneas to heaven, indeed! she, who so well knows how much trouble it cost Aeneas himself, who was more than twice as strong, to carry his father, who was less than half the weight, a few perch, here on the solid earth. She has no notion of it; she is only going to wash him—however supererogatory a work that may seem to be—before she commits him finally to the river: "Tunc corpus nati abluere et deferre sub undas. Quicquid erat mortale iubet." And now prepare for a surprise. The most curious thing in the whole picture is to come yet. Put on your spectacles and tell me if you see anything on Aeneas's chin besides the beard. "Do you mean the little Lilliputian standing on it with his feet buried in the beard, and his hands lifted up and joined together as in the act of prayer?" "Exactly. Do you know who that is?" "How should I, not being the dean of St. Patrick's?" "Guess." "Perhaps queen Mab's husband; not queen Mab herself, 'for masculine he is beyond all question'." "Out; guess again." "Some tiny great-grandchild of Aeneas, playing hide-and-seek in great-grandfather's beard." "Out, again. I'll tell you, for you'll not guess till doom's day. That's Aeneas himself." "What! standing on his own chin!" "Yes; spewed out of his own mouth with his last breath, for the very purpose of being carried up to heaven with the least possible trouble to all parties." "Well, how stupid I am! Often and often as I heard there were two Aeneases, one inside and the other outside, I never before understood how it was; but I see it now with my own eyes. That's a clever artist." "You have it perfectly: two Aeneases; one inside, light and little, to be carried up into heaven; the other outside, big and heavy, to remain down here, drowned in the Numicus." "Nothing can be plainer."

PROLOGUES AND COLOPHON

It was customary in manuscripts and early printed volumes for a brief metrical summary called a periocha or argumentum to precede each individual book of a classical author. Sulpicius Apollinaris supplied a famous series of epitomes for the plays of Terence and for the twelve books of the Aeneid. Other argumenta for Virgil were prepared by later hands. Maphaeus Vegius' "Thirteenth Book" was not left long without its own metrical introduction. Two manuscripts in the British Museum (Arundel Manuscripts 82 and 193) are prefaced by an eleven-line hexameter summary different from the twelve-line argumentum that appears in the Venice Virgil of 1471 and in all the subsequent editions which contain the "Thirteenth Book." Maphaeus himself may have prepared one of these periochai for his poem.

The eleven-line argument follows. The longer preface precedes the printed text on page 52, below.

Victor ut Aeneas belli fuit, illico subdunt
Imperio sese Rutuli, datur inde per ipsum
Hostia lausque diis, pariter congaudet Iulo
Ac sociis pro pace suis; Turnique Latinus
Morte dolet; patriae miseranda incendia Daunus
Eversae et cari deflet pia funera nati.
Conubium instaurat natae, lectosque hymenaeos
Rex socer Aeneae genero; gens utraque pacto
Foedere pacis ovat; tunc nomine coniugis urbem
Instruit, et tandem placida sub pace regentem
Transulit Aeneas Venus astra in summa beatum.

The same Arundel manuscripts mentioned above contain an epigram complimentary to Maphaeus Vegius and conceived in the spirit of some of the Carmina Virgiliana quoted by Bährens in his Poetae Latini Minores.¹⁰⁶ It was a type of composition that found favor in the late Roman period and in the Humanistic Age. Vegius himself indulged in it freely. The lines run thus:

Musae omnes gaudete, novus surrexit ab urbe
Laude Maro, Vegius sua nomina data Mafeus.
Ter decimum librum quem morte nequit adire
Virgilius vates canit iste profarier ausus
Alter Parthenias, dicunt, mirabile pubes
Talia gesta refert credisque videre Maronem.

¹⁰⁶ Luigi Raffaele quotes two other poems of similar purport in his Maffeo Vegio (Bologna, 1909), pages 100 f.

Adam de Ambergau's colophon, which concludes the Virgil of 1471, is an amusing composition that bespeaks comment. Its ligatures and abbreviations are as elaborate as those of the medieval scribes. The ten lines are replete with riddles almost amounting to charades. Polysyndeton is absurdly prominent. The use of sesqui in the fourth line as an intensive adverb is odd and unclassical. The phrase appears to mean "in one and the self-same identical spot." "Parvo numerosa iuventus" suggests an extremely small edition. Only four copies have been identified by Copinger among the Incunabula Virgiliana. Adam addresses his reader with the words:

Mincidae quicumque cupit cognoscere vatis
Carmina: seu quisquis Vegi simul optat habere,
Me legat, aut fratres, parvo numerosa iuventus,
Uno eodemque sumus pressi sesquique locoque
Non Solomon, neque Hiram, non Daedalus atque Sibylla,
Graecia non omnis sapientibus inclyta quamquam,
Non armis Romana potens aequandaque divis
Gloria iactavit tali sese arte decoram.
Nos igitur peterit patrem qui nomine primum
Rettulit alter Adam, formis quos pressit aenis.

The .xiii. Bookes OF ÆNEIDOS.

The first twelue beeing the woorke of the diuine Poet
Virgil Maro, and the thirtenth the supplement of Maphæus Vegius.

Translated into English verse to the fyrst thirddpart of the tenth Booke, by Thomas Phaer Esquire: and the residue finished, and now the second time newly set forth for the delite of such as are studious in Poetrie: By Thomas Twyne, Doctor in Physicke.

¶ Imprinted at London by William How, for Abraham
Veale, dwelling in Daules Church yeard, at the signe of the Lambe.
1584.

TEXT OF THE "EDITIO PRINCEPS"

MAFEI VEGII LAUDENSIS
LIBRI XII AENEIDOS SUPPLEMENTUM
PAPIAE VI IDUS OCTOBRIS
1428

WITH THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION
BY THOMAS TWYNE, M.D.

THE THIRTEENTH BOOKE OF AENEIDOS SUPPLIED BY
MAPHAEUS VEGIUS LAUDENSIS

TRANSLATED BY THOMAS TWYNE, M.D.
LONDON, OCTOBER 26, 1583

ARGUMENTUM

- Turnus ut extremo vitam sub Marte profudit
Subdunt se Rutuli Aeneae, Troiana sequentes
Agmina; dehinc superis meriti redduntur honores.
Congaudet nato ac sociis, memor ante malorum
5 Actorum pater Aeneas. Turni inde Latinus
Morte dolet. Patriae miseranda incendia Daunus
Eversae, et cari deflet pia funera nati.
Connubium instaurat natae laetosque hymenaeos
Rex socer Aeneae genero; gens utraque pacto
10 Foedere pacis ovat; tum nomine coniugis urbem
Instruit, et tandem placida sub pace regentem
Transtulit Aeneam Venus astra in summa beatum.

THE ARGUMENT

So soone as Aeneas had slayne Turnus, the Rutilians submitting themselves are received into the mercy of the Conquerour, not without deserved reproches for resisting the providence of the Gods, concerning his arrivall and setting in Italy. Then Aeneas taketh Pallas belt from about Turnus, which was partlye the cause that he slue him, determining to send it for a token to king Evander. After this, honour being duly perfourmed to such as wer slain in fight, Aeneas congratulateth to his sunne Iulus and mates, their happie victories, and quiet peace purchased at last, after so many tempestes and troubles. But king Latinus bewayling the death of Turnus, with confutation of the fond enticements of Ambition, and uncerteinty of honour and kingly estate, sendeth the dead body unto Daunus his father, who most pitifully lamenteth the rashnesse and haplesse successe of his sunne, as also the destruction of his citie Ardea, which being consumed with fire, is transformed into a byrd of that name. Immediately Latinus sendeth Orators unto Aeneas, Drances being cheefe, who after discommendation of Turnus whom he hated, and the excuse of king Latinus touching the breache of covenants, desireth him into the citie and pallace, where with great solemnitie Latinus coupleth unto him in marriage Lavinia his daughter, and only childe, both Troyans and Italians muche reioycing at this legue of amitie. Shortly after, Aeneas buildeth a citie, whiche by the advise of his mother Venus, hee calleth after his wives name: and king Latinus dying, hee succeedeth him in the crowne and government. And when he had raigned full three yeares, his mother Venus clensing him from contagion of mortalitie in the river Numicius neare Laurentum, she carieth him up into heaven, and translateth him into the number of the starres.

- Turnus ut extremo devictus Marte profudit
Effugientem animam, medioque sub agmine victor
Magnanimus stetit Aeneas, Mavortius heros,
Obstupere omnes, gemitumque dedere Latini,
5 Et durum ex alto revomentes corde dolorem,
Concussis cecidere animis; ceu frondibus ingens
Silva dolet lapsis boreali impulsa tumultu.
Tum tela infigunt terrae, et mucronibus haerent:
Scutaque deponunt humeris, et proelia damnant,
10 Insanumque horrent optati Martis amorem:
Nec frenum, nec colla pati captiva recusant,
Et veniam orare et requiem finemque malorum.
Sicut acerba duo quando in certamina tauri
Concurrunt, largo miscentes sanguine pugnam,
15 Cuique suum pecus inclinat: sin cesserit uni
Palma duci, mox quae victo pecora ante favebant
Nunc sese imperio subdunt victoris, et ultro
Quaquam animum dolor altus habet, parere fatentur:
Non aliter Rutuli, licet ingens maeror adhausit
20 Pectora pulsa metu caesi ducis, incluta malunt
Arma sequi et Phrygium Aenean, foedusque precari Pacis, et aeternam rebus belloque quietem.

- Tunc Turnum super adsistens placido ore profatur Aeneas: "Quae tanta animo dementia crevit,
25 Ut Teucros superum monitis, summique tonantis
Imperio huc vectos, patereris, Dauniae proles,
Italia et pactis nequicquam expellere testis?
Disce Iovem revereri et iussa facessere divum.
Magnum etiam capit ira Iovem, memoresque malorum
30 Sollicitat vindicta deos; en ultima tanti
Meta furoris adest, quo contra iura fidemque
Iliacam rupto turbasti foedere gentem.
Ecce suprema dies, aliis exempla sub aevum
Venturum missura; Iovem ne temnere frustra
35 Fas sit, et indignos bellorum accendere motus.

When Turnus in this finall fight downethrowne, his flittring ghost
 Had yeelded up unto the aire, in midst of all the host Aeneas valient victour stands, god Mavors champion bold.
 The Latines stoynisht standing, from their hartes great groanes unfold,
 And deeply from their inward thoughts revolving cause of care,
 Their daunted minds they do let fall; Like as thick woods that are
 Of bignesse huge, lament their losse when first their leaves do fall
 Through furious force of northren blastes, of greene that spoiles them all.
 Their weapons then on ground they pight, and on their swords do rest,
 And from their shoulders lay their shieldes, and battle do detest.
 The frantike love of warre, erewhile well liked, now they hate.
 No pleasure of the victour they refuse, nor captive state.
 But pardon crave, and rest require, all mischiefes to abate.
 Like as when two couragious Bulles together run in fight,
 With stoare of blood redoubling stripes, the heards there prest in sight
 As they pertayne, endlyne ech to their bull, but if one quayle,
 They earst which lov'de their foyled guide, to him that did prevayle
 Submit themselves, and though great greefe their harts no doubt possesse,
 Do willingly yeeld up themselves as subiects naithesle:
 The Rutils so, though sorrowes great their harts did then molest,
 Through feare of thus their captayne slayne, in mind did then protest.
 The victour armes for to pursue, and Troyan Duke obey,
 And leagues to crave, and peace eterne from warres for to enioy.

The representa-tion of men dis-comfitted in battell

On Turnus corps Aeneas sitting then, thus mildly spake.
 What furie great from modestie thy minde so madly brake,
 That Troyans by the heastes of Gods, and doome of Iove on hie
 Ariving here, thou wouldst not let to dwell in Italie,
 O Turnus, but in vayne from promisd houses wouldst expell?
 Learne Iove to feare, and what the Gods do will, to like that well.
 For mightie Iove in wrath will burne, and what thing worthye blame
 Is done, the Gods will not forget for to revenge the same.
 Loe here the end of all thy rage, whereby gaynst faith and right
 Disturbing leagues, the Troyan bands thou didst provoke to fight.
 Loe here the finall day, which unto such as shall be borne
 In time hereafter may a mirrour be, not Iove to skorne
 That they presume in vayne, and hateful broyles of warres to breede.

The punishmente of periurie

Nunc armis laetare tuis, heu, nobile corpus,
Turne iaces: at non tibi erit Lavinia parvo,
Nec dextra tamen Aeneae cecidisse pudebit!
Nunc, Rutuli, hinc auferte ducem vestrum, arma virumque
40 Largior, atque omnem deflendae mortis honorem.
Sed quae Pallantis fuerant ingentia baltei
Pondera, transmittam Evandro, ut solacia caeso
Haud levia hoste ferat, Turnoque exsultet adempto.
Vos memores tamen, Ausonii, melioribus uti
45 Discite bellorum auspiciis: ego sidera iuro,
Nunquam acies, nunquam arma libens in proelia movi:
Sed vestris actus furiis defendere toto
Optavi et licuit Troianas robore partes.”

Nec fatus plura Aeneas; se laetus ad altos
50 Vertebat muros, et Troia tecta petebat.
Una ipsum Teucrorum omnis conversa iuventus
Exsultans sequitur, volucresque per arva pedum vi
Quadrupedes citat, incusans acri ore Latinos,
Ignavosque vocans: strepit altus plausibus aether.
55 Et quamvis inhumata rogis dare corpora surgat
Ingens cura animo, sociosque imponere flammis,
Maius opus tamen Aeneas sub pectore volvens,
Primum aris meritos superum mandabat honores.
Tum pingues patrio iugulant ex more iuencos,
60 Immittuntque sues, niveasque in templa bidentes,
Purpuream effuso pulsantes sanguine terram.
Viscera diripiunt, et caesim in frustra trucidant,
Denudantque gregem, et flammis verubusque remittunt.
Tum vina effundunt pateris, et dona Lyaei
65 Accumulant; plenae venerantur lancibus aras;
Tura ignes adolent; onerata altaria fumant.

Tum plausus per tecta movent, magumque tonantem
Extollunt, Veneremque, et te, Saturnia Iuno,
Iam placidam, et meliorem ingenti laude fatentur,

But in thine armour now reioyce: A noble corps indeede
 Here Turnus dead thou lieſt, but yet Lavinia coſt thee deare.
 No ſhame that with Aeneas hand yſlayne thou lieſt heare.
 Now Rutils hence convey your Lord, his armour, and the man
 I franckly yeelde, do honours to the dead the beſt ye can.
 As for the weightie belt, which unto Pallas did belong,
 To king Evander will I ſend, that comfort great among
 For death of foes he may conceive, and ioy for Turnus ſlayne,
 And you Ausonians theſe thinges reſe in mindfull brayne,
 Henceforth to learne ſome iuſter cauſe of battaile to enſue.
 By ſtarres I ſweare, that never feild nor armes I did purſue
 In willing minde, but forced foorth through this your frantick moode,
 With Troyan ſtrength your headlong force at wiſh and wil withſtoode.

Aeneas ſayd no more, but to the loftie walles with cheare
 His ſteppes did turne, and to the Troyan houſes drew him neare.
 Him after all the troupe of Phrigian youth reioycing trace,
 And wightfull ſteedes with force of nimble foote prick forth apace:
 Reproving ſore the Latines all by daſtardes loathſome name,
 With ſhouts and noyſes great, that ayre and ſkies reſound the ſame.
 And though the bodies yet untombde to burne with great deſire
 Within his mind doth riſe, and his dead mates to waſte with fire:
 Aeneas yet revolving greater matters in his breſt,
 To yeeld the Gods their honours firſt right due he deemde it beſt.
 Then Heickfers fat, as countries guiſe hath taught, forthwith they kil,
 And hogges they caſt on heapes, and ſheepe they drive the temples til,
 And trampled earth with ſtreames of blood ſhead forth they purple ſtaine,
 And intrailles forth they pluck, and from the flock their felles they ſtraine,
 And corpes forth they cut, and broches lay to roſt at fire.
 Then wine in boules they forth do fill, as cuſtome doth require.
 And gifts to Bacchus up do heape, and with full cuppes adore
 His ſacred alters fuming fat with cenſe and fleſh good ſtore.
 Then in the houſes ſhoutings loude they make, and Iove betweene
 They do extoll, and Venus thee, and thee O Iuno Queene
 More friendly and more loving now with great prayſe they confesse.
 And Mars himſelfe, and all the troupe of Gods both more and leſſe
 Are there recited, and with laud extolled to the ſkie.

Thanks to God to be yielded before dutie to men

- 70 Mavortemque ipsum: tum cetera turba deorum
In medium effertur, summis cum vocibus altos
Perlata ad caelos: ante omnes gratior unus
Aeneas duplices mittebat ad aethera palmas,
Et puerum pauca ore dabat complexus Iulum:
75 "Nate, in quo spes una patris, per tanta laborum
Quem variis actus fatis discrimina duxi,
Ecce inventa quies; ecce illa extrema malorum,
Aerumnis factura modum acceptissima semper,
Atque optata dies, quam dura in bella vocatus,
80 Saepe tibi dis auspiciis meminisse futuram
Iam memini: nunc te, cum primum Aurora rubebit
Craetina, sublimen Rutulorum ad moenia mittam."
Dehinc sese ad gentem Iliacam volvebat, et alto
Pectore verba trahens, blando sic ore locutus:
- 85 "O socii, per dura ac densa pericula vecti,
Per tantos bellorum aestus, duplicesque furores
Armorum, per totque hiemes, per quicquid acerbum
Horrendum, grave, triste, ingens, per quicquid iniquum
Infauftum, et crudele foret, convertite mentem
90 In melius: iam finis adest: hic meta malorum
Stabit, et optatam Latia cum gente quietem
Iungemus: dabit inde mihi Lavinia coniux
Bello acri defensa, Italo cum sanguine mixtam
Troianam transferre aeterna in saecula gentem.
95 Unum oro, socii, Ausonios communiter aequo
Ferte animo, et vosmet socero observate Latino.
Sceptrum idem sublime geret: sententia mentem
Haec habet: at bello vos, et praestantibus armis
Discite me et pietate sequi: quae gloria nobis
100 Cesserit, in promptu est; sed caelum, et sidera testor,
Qui vos tantorum eripui de clade malorum,
Idem ego sub maiora potens vos praemia ducam."

Talibus orabat, variosque in pectore casus

But Lord Aeneas peere of price to all the standers bie,
 His doubled handes in humblewise did stretche into the aire,
 And clasping fast his childe hee spake thus to Iulus faire.
 O sunne, thy fathers only hope, whom through distresses strange
 My selfe have led, with destnies diverse drawne enforst to range.
 Loe, rest at length is found, loe now that day the last of payne
 And troubles great that bringes an ende, most pleasant now we gaine.
 Which day most wished still, when me to warres hard happe did call,
 By Gods good will, I know, to thee I oft did tell, would fall.
 And now when first the morning bright shall shine with purple weede,
 Unto the Rutil walles I thee will send advancde indeede.
 Then to the Troyan nation next he turned and deepe from out
 His brest these words he drew, and mildly spake to all the rout. [broyls
 O Mates, that through sharp dangers thick and oft have past, through
 Of warres so great, through winters many, fierce and bitter toyles,
 Through what was fearefull, greevous, wofull, huge, and what uniust,
 Unfortunate and cruell too, pluck up to better lust
 Your minds as now, the ende is come, heere shall that end be fixt
 Of mischiefes all, and wished peace be settled us betwixt
 And these the men of Latium. Then shall Lavinia deere
 My wife, whom I in battaile fierce have woon, to Troyans cheare
 Advauce our stock with Itayle blood commixt to bide for aye.
 This one thing Mates, the Ausonians, with equall minds, I pray,
 To beare and use, and eke my sire in law Latinus King
 For to obay, for he the scepter shall enioy, this thing
 I have determind in minde: but you in warres and fight
 Learne godlinesse of me, and trace therein my steppes aright.
 What glory great is gaynd thereby to us, you playnly see.
 But by the heaven and glittering starres I sweare, eterne that bee:
 I that preserved have your lives before from dangers hard,
 Will after this requite your toyles with greater far reward.

Recitall of calamities maketh rest the more plesant

Such talke he treated then, and sundry chances in his brest
 Forepassed did revolve, not smally reckoning of his rest
 Through travaile late obtaynde, and tender love in brest he bare Unto his Troyans, whome to have escape from dangers rare
 He did reioyce. And like the Hen her broode that clucking guides,

- Praeteritos volvens, partamque labore quietem
 105 Haud parvo: nimium ardenti exundabat amore
 In Teucros, gravibus tandem evasisse periclis
 Exsultans: velut exiguis cum ex aethere gyrans
 Incubuit pullis, et magno turbine milvus
 Insiliens avido ore furit, stragemque minatur;
 110 Tum cristata ales perculso pectore mater
 Consurgit, misero natorum exterrita casu,
 Rostrum acuit, totisque petit conatibus hostem,
 Et multa expulsum vi tandem cedere cogit;
 Dehinc perturbatos crocitant exquirat, et omnes
 115 Attonitos cogit, pro caris anxia natis,
 Et tanto ereptos gaudet superesse periclo.
 Non secus Anchisa genitus mulcebat amicis
 Troianos dictis, antiquum corde timorem
 Flagrantesque agitans curas, et gaudia longis
 120 Tandem parta malis, et quae perferre molestum
 Ante fuit, meminisse iuvat: verum altior idem
 Ingenti et clara Aeneas supereminet omnes
 Virtute excellens, et pro tot numina donis
 Exorat, summisque Iovem cum laudibus effert.
- 125 Interea Rutuli magnum et miserabile funus,
 Exanimumque ducem tulerant sub tecta frequentes,
 Correpti maerore animos, largumque pluentes
 Imbrem oculis, et iam lato clamore Latinum
 Defessum, et varios agitantem pectore casus
 130 Complerant; qui postquam altos crebrescere questus,
 Et Turnum ingenti confossum vulnere vidit,
 Haud tenuit lacrimas; dehinc maestum leniter agmen
 Corripuit, manibus verbisque silentia ponens.
 Ceu spumantis apri quando per viscera dentes
 135 Fulmineos canis exceptit praestantior omni
 Ex numero, tunc infausto perterrita casu
 Cetera turba fugit latrantum, atque ore magistrum
 Circumstans querulo pavitat, magnoque ululatu

When in the ayre a kyte that soaring round in compasse glides
 She doth espie, which stouping swift to ground with greedy bill
 With furie seekes to pray, and threatneth all the birds to kill.
 The combed Dame then touchte at heart, doth streit her self aduance, Affrighted with the sodayne feare, and chickens heauie chaunce.
 She whets her bill, and with her greateſt force withſtands her foe,
 Until with ſturdie ſtrength ſhe make him voyd away to goe.
 Then cackling thence, ſhe halts to ſeeke them earſt diſturbde with feare,
 And flockes them much amaze, ſuch love ſhe to her younge doth beare.
 None otherwiſe Anchisus ſunne with words, and geſture milde
 The Troyans did appeaſe, while former feares and dangers wilde
 Outworne he doth revolve in minde, and ioyes by troubles long,
 Obteyned yet at length, which though in bearing bread him wrong
 In former times, the memorie thereof yet bringes delight.
 But Lord Aeneas farre excelling all in vertue bright,
 Due thanks unto the Gods for gifts received earſt he payes,
 And Iupiter almightie God extolles with worthie prayſe.
 Therwhiles the great and wofull corps, the Rutils thick in throng,
 Duke Turnus bodie dead have brought to towne in pompe along
 With heauie harts perplext, and ſheading ſtreams of trickling teares.
 The clamour great with greefe had filled ſoone Latinus eares
 All tired now, and caſting ſundry chances in his breſt.
 Who after that he heard the mone encrease with mournfull queſt,
 And Turnus with a mightie wound yſlayne did there behold,
 His teares he could not ſtay, but meekely al the troupe controld.
 And with his handes and ſpeeches ſad deepe ſilence did commaund.
 And like as when the foming boare with tuſkes fierce forth that ſtand,
 Some noble hound the cheefe of all the kennell, through hath ſtuck,
 The barking crue doth back retire diſmayed with dreadfull luck,
 And thronging thick about their maiſter round do make their mone,
 And houlings great ſend forth with dread and greefe commixt at one.
 But then the maiſter holding up his hands and bidding hush,
 Their noyſe they ſtraight reſtrayne, and ſilent ſit at preſent push.
 The Rutils ſo, in voices whuſt did inward ſorrow preſſe.
 Then king Latinus ſhedding teares, his words thus to adreſſe
 From heart deepe drawn began. What troubles great, what often change

Infremit; at commota manu, dominique iubentis
140 Ore silet, gemitumque premit, seseque coercet.
Haud aliter Rutuli suppressa voce quierunt.

Tunc sic illacrimans rex alto corde Latinus
Verba dabat: "Quantos humana negotia motus,
Alternasque vices miscent! Quo turbine fertur
145 Vita hominum! O fragilis damnosa superbia sceptri!
O furor, O nimium dominandi innata cupido,
Mortales quo caeca vehis? Quo gloria tantis
Inflatos transfers animos quaesita periclis?
Quot tecum insidias, quot mortes, quanta malorum
150 Magnorum tormenta geris, quot tela, quot enses
Ante oculos, si cernis, habes! Heu dulce venenum,
Et mundi letalis honos! Heu tristia regni
Munera, quae haud parvo constent, et grandia rerum
Pondera, quae nunquam placidam permittere pacem, 155 Nec requiem conferre queant! Heu sortis acerbae Et miserae regale decus, magnoque timori
Suppositos regum casus, pacisque negatos!
Quid, Turne, ingenti Ausoniam movisse tumultu,
Et dura Aeneadas turbasse in bella coactos,
160 Quid iuvat, et violasse sacrae promissa quietis
Pignora, quae tibi tanta animo impatientia venit?
Ut Martem cum gente deum iussuque tonantis
Huc vecta gereres, et nostris pellere tectis
Ultro instans velles, nataeque abrumpere foedus
165 Pollicitae genero Aeneae, et me bella negante
Dura movere manu? Quae tanta insania mentem
Implicuit? Quoties te in saevi Martis euntem
Agmina, sublimemque in equo et radiantibus armis
Tentavi revocare, et iter suspendere coeptum?
170 Corripui et pavitans cedentem in limine frustra?
Inde ego quanta tuli, testantur moenia tectis
Semirutis, magnique albentes ossibus agri,
Et Latium toto vacuatum robore, et ingens

Do mens affaires assay, and tosse their minds with whirlwind strange?
 O foolish fancie fayne to rule, and scepters brittle pride.
 O frantike madnesse graft in men desirous realmes to guide.
 To what distresse doost thou enforce mens blinded harts to run,
 And glorie got with dangers great our puffed minds to wun?
 How many treasons, deaths, and perils dread of mischiefes fell,
 How many gleaves and swords before thine eyes (if thou couldst tell)
 Attending wait on thee? O deadly poyson dulcet sweete,
 And worldly honours pestilent. O wofull travayles meete
 For such as crownes do weare, that cost them deare, and heavie sway
 Of charge, which never suffers them to live a merry day,
 Nor any time of rest permits. O wofull princely state,
 And miserable chaunce of kings subiect to dread and hate.
 What hath it, Turnus, thee availd the whole Ausonian land
 With tumultes great to stir, and Troians armd thus to withstand?
 And to infringe the covenantes fixt of sacred peace and rest?
 Whence could so great impatience invade thy seely brest?
 That warres with stocke of Gods, by will of high Iove hether brought Wouldst make, and from our seates, provoking us, to drive hadst thought?
 And causde my daughter breake the faith to lord Aeneas sworne,
 And warres to raise, which I gainsaying, should have bin forborne?
 What madnes great thy senses so did sot? How often thee
 To batteill prest, and mounted faire, all glittering bright to see,
 Have I assayd to stay, they iourney purposde to restraine,
 And fearing blamed have thee parting oft, but all in vaine.
 Herof my gaines the citie shewes with houses halfe downe rent,
 And mighty feildes about with Latine snowwhite bones besprent,
 And Latium spoild of all the strength, and hugie slaughters made,
 And rivers staind with blood of men that ruddy running fade.
 And feares long time continuing, and labours hardly rid,
 Which I myselfe, old man, have oft with danger great abid.
 But Turnus dead heere now thou liest where is thy noble pride
 Of youthly yeeres, thy minde surpassing high? Where doth abide
 The honour of thy countenance, thy persons cumly grace
 Where is it now become? From Daunus eies what teares down trace,
 And sorrowes sharpe his hart assalt, shalt, Turnus, thou procure?

He bewaieth the inconstancie of Fortune, and the fickle estate of honour

Discom-modities of war

Exitium, fluviique humana caede rubentes,
175 Et longi, trepidique metus, durique labores,
Quos toties senior per tanta pericula cepi.
At nunc, Turne, iaces: ubinam generosa iuventae
Gloria, et excellens animus, quo splendidus altae
Frontis honos, quonam illa decens it frontis imago?
180 Ah! quantas Dauno lacrimas, acresque dolores,
Turne, dabis, quanto circumfluet Ardea fletu!
Sed non degeneri et pudibundo vulnere fossum
Aspiciet: saltem hoc miserae solamen habebit
Mortis, ut Aeneae Troiani exceperis ense.”

185 Haec fatus, lacrimisque genas implevit obortis.
Tum sese ad turbam volvens, miserabile corpus
Attolli, et caram maesti genitoris ad urbem
Deferri, atque pios fieri mandabat honores.
Mox circumfusi Rutuli toto agmine caesum
190 Sublimen ingenti iuvenem posuere feretro,
Multa super Teucrum raptorum insignia secum,
Et galeas, et equos, ensesque et tela ferentes.
Post currus Phrygia sudantes caede sequuntur.
It lacrimans, et ducit equum docta arte Metiscus
Rorantem et fletu madidum, qui vexerat ante
195 Victorem Turnum, atque hostili strage furentem.
Hinc alii versa arma gerunt; tum extera pubes
Flens sequitur, largisque humectat pectora guttis.
Et iam fessi ibant per muta silentia noctis
200 Caedentes sese; gressumque in tecta Latinus
Flexerat, ingenti turbatus funere mentem.
Una omnes lacrimas matres, puerique senesque
Fundebant, maestam implentes mugitibus urbem,
Inscius at tantos Daunus superesse dolores,
205 Et natum extremo consumptum Marte superbam
Effundisse animam, largisque ad moenia duci
Cum lacrimis, alios gemitus curasque fovebat.
Namque ex diversa caderent dum parte Latini,

What streames of teares, what bitter greefe all Ardea to endure?
But yet with dastard shameful wound thee slaine he shall not finde.
Which will no slender comfort bring unto his careful minde,
That by Aeneas sword of Troy thy life thou hast untwinde.

This said, the trickling teares on blubred cheekes he downe let fall.
And turning to the multitude, the corpes before them all Unto his fathers wofull towne to beare he them did will,
Where sacred honours due unto the dead they should fulfill.
Anon the body of the youth the Rutils thicke in throng
Advauncing up did lift, and in a coffin laid along.

Turnus
body sent to his father

Then ensignes brave they beare, and spoiles from Troians tane in fight.
And headpeices, and steedes, and swordes, and sheildes and armour bright.
Anon the charrets warme with Phrygian slaughter next ensue.
Then weeping next Metiscus leades his horse, with traveill true
That trained was, bedewd with teares, and wet with wofull mone,
Which horse before had oft Lord Turnus victour borne, alone
When slaughter great in furious moode he made upon his foes.
Then others marching on with turned weapons plodding goes.
At last the rout of youthes do weeping follow, large with teares
Their breastes distilling wet, and whust the night foorth wearie weares.
Thiswhile Latinus king into the court his steps had bent,
When much for funerall so great perplexed in minde he went.
The matrones all in troupe, the children younge, and fathers grave,
Their teares downe trickling shead, the town with shrieks doth yelling rave.

But Daunus nothing privie of such woes yet to remaine,
Nor that his noble sun in final fight of combat slaine
His haughtie ghost had yeelded up, and now with sad aray
Drew neere the towne, his hart with other sorowes did affray.
For at what time the Latine bandes in fight were put to wurst,
And noble Turnus breathing blood imbrued the feild accurst:
That time an hugie fire the towne had caught, and walles on hie,
And Ardea wofull Daunus cuntry scorched made to frie,
Which all to ashes was consumde, the flame it was so great.
There was no meanes nor hope remaining left to save the seat.
I wot nere if the Gods would have it so, or Destnies wild
This token to foreshew that Turnus then in fight was kild.

Mischifs linked together

Et calido Turnus foedaret sanguine terram,
210 Urbem ingens flamma, et muros invaserat altos;
Fumabatque rutis miseri patris Ardea tectis
Et tota in cinerem vergebat, et astra favillae
Altivolae implebant, nec spes plus ulla salutis.
Sive quidem sic dis placitum est, seu praescia Turni
215 Signum ut fata darent horrendo Marte perempti.

Extemplo concussi animos, turbataque cives
Pectora caedentes, miserandae sortis iniquum
Deflebant casum, longoque ex ordine matres
Atque avidos totis fugiebant viribus ignes.
220 Ac veluti cum nigra cohors posuere sub alta
Arbore, et infixi radice cubilia longo
Formicae instantes operi, si dura securis
Incumbat, versoque infringat culmine parvas
Saeva casas, mox certatim sese agmine sparso
225 Corripiunt, maestaeque fuga trepidaeque feruntur:
Et velut ignitum testudo eversa calorem
Cum sensit, luctata diu, pedibusque renitens,
Caudam agitansque caput, magna vi cedere tentat,
Aestuatur, et multo insudans conamina miscet:
230 Haud aliter miseri per tanta pericula cives
Iactabant sese, et turbata mente ferebant.
Ante omnes senio confectus ad aethera voces
Fundebat querulas Daunus, superosque vocabat.
Tum vero e mediis visa est consurgere flammis,
235 Percussisque ales volitare per aera pennis,
Indicium nomenque urbis versae Ardea servans;
Et cui sublimes stabant in moenibus arces,
Mutata effusis nunc circumlabitur alis.
Attoniti novitate omnes, monitisque deorum
240 Haud parvis confusi, humeros atque ora tenebant.
At Daunus, patriae ardenti concussus amore
Eversae, duros gemitus sub corde premebat.
Haec inter magno volitans praenuntia motu

Forthwith the people much appald in minde, and sore affright
 Their breasts did beat, and mourning sore bewaild this heavy plight.
 So did the matrones standing all a rew with like desires,
 Where ech their utmoſt did assay to ſhun the raging fires.
 And like as when the armie blacke of Antes preſt hot at wurke,
 That underneath ſome tree, or hollow roote wherein to lurke
 Their dwelling poore have made, if ſo by hap thereto at length
 And are be ſet, and ſo the trunke be layd along by ſtrength,
 On ſtraglingwiſe anon they ſtartle forth in troupes of ſtrives,
 And ſwift to flight themſelves betake faſt trudging for their lives.
 And like the Snaile which creeping on an houſe with fire oppreſt.
 When firſt ſhe feeles the heate, with ſtriving long doth take no reſt,
 With head and taile ſhe toyles, all meanes of ſcaping to assay,
 The heat her ſkorching, wiles ſhe none lets paſ to get away.
 Noneotherwiſe, the citizens with dangers like beſet
 Beſtur themſelves, when preſent feare their troubled mindes did let.
 But Daunus old, with yeeres, good man, accloyd, above them all
 To heaven his voice did liſt, and to the Gods for helpe did call.
 Then was there ſeene anon out of the thickeſt flame to riſe
 A foule with clapping winges, aloft which mounting cut the ſkies.
 The ſigne and name retaining of the towne, which Ardea hight.
 So that which late with walles and towres did ſtand ful ſteepe in ſight,
 Transfourmed now into a birde with winges doth flie about.
 Amazed at this wonder all, and heaſtes of Gods no doubt
 Not ſmall aſtoinde, their burdned backes and mouthes they ſtil do hold.
 But Daunus oft his cuntries loſſe in heaue hart doth fold
 With raging flames conſumed thus, and greifes in minde reſtraines
 On necke of this, a fame forerunning quicke with rumour raignes,
 Which far and wide their mated mindes invades with clamour newe,
 That hard at hand approaching comes a wofull corſe in viewe
 With armed troupes accompaned, which Turnus body dead
 Are bringing home, whoſe life through fatall wound was lately fled.
 Aſtoined all hereat, for with as cuntrey guiſe had taught,
 Thick threefold thronging fired brands black burning forth they braught
 The feildes with flames do ſhine, and to the cummers ſide by ſide
 Themſelves they ioyne, whom when thus al in ray the matrones ſpide

Unfortunate ſouthſay

Fama ruit, latisque animos clamoribus implet,
245 Adventare novum multo cum milite funus,
Et Turnum exanimem, et letali vulnere victum.
Mox turbati omnes nigras duxere frequentes
Incensas ex more faces: ardentibus agri
Collucent flammis: dehinc se venientibus addunt.
250 Quos postquam toto videre ex agmine matres,
Percussis vocem palmis ad sidera tollunt.

At Daunus, cari ut patuerunt funera nati,
Substitit, et demum ingenti correpta dolore
Ora movens, medium sese furibundus in agmen
255 Proripuit, Turnumque super prostratus et haerens,
Cum primum fari potuit, sic edidit ore:

“Nate, patris dolor, et fessae miseranda senectae
Rupta quies, quo me tantis iactate periclis
Duxisti, et saevis tandem devicte sub armis?
260 Quo tua me praestans animi constantia vexit?
Hic clarae virtutis honos, et gloria sceptri?
Hoc magni decus imperii, talesne triumphos,
Nate, refers? Haec illa quies promissa parenti
Afflicto toties, haec meta optata laborum?
265 Heu miserum! quam praecipites labentia casus
Saecla agitant, quanto volvuntur fata tumultu!
Qui iam sublimes referebas clarus honores,
Et magnus toto in Latio, quem Troes in armis
Horrendum, et trepidi toties sensere furem,
270 Nunc, mi Turne, iaces, miserandum et flebile corpus;
Iam mutum et sine voce caput: quo pulchrior alter
Non fuit in tota Ausonia, nec gratior ullus
Eloquio, nec quis positus ingentior armis.
Nate, ubi forma nitens, niveaque in fronte serenus
275 Ille decor, dulcisque oculorum aspectus, et altae
Sidereus cervicis honos? His gloria Martis
Contigit auspiciis: tali rediture paratu

Their hands for woe they wring, and to the cloudes they lift their crie.
But Daunus when he saw his sunnes dead corpse approching nie,
Still standing forth anon did cast with greife his ruthfull looke,
And faring frantiklike into the throng himselfe betooke,
And on the wofull corse him there he kest and held it fast,
And thus when speech to him began returne, he spake at last.

O sun, thy fathers greife, and stay from weered yeeres bereft, [left?
Through dangers great mee drawne (poore wretch alas) where hast thou
Where did thy valure stout of minde mee lead but all in vaine
In murdrous fight with cruell wound that thus at length art slaine?
Is this the honour of thy strength, and glorie of our crowne?
Is this our Empires maiestie, and state of great renowne?
Such triumphes, sun, doost thou returning bring? is this the rest
Which for thy father afflicted oft to win thou didst protest?
Of all our sharpe sustained toiles so long, is this the end?
Poore man, alas, how hastily fell fortune forth doth bend
Our curelesse sliding time, and with what stur do Destnies run?
For thou that late to honours high extold didst shine as sun,
And greatest in all Latium land wast held, whom Troian bandes
So oft in feild did fearfull feele, and flie thy furious handes:
Now Turnus here my childe thou liest, a wofull corse in sight.
Thy head deprived is of speech, than which for bewtie bright
Not all Ausonia had the like, nor yet for speech thy peere
Softflowing, nor in peace that could himself more stoutly beere.
Where is become thy glistring hue, and countnance cumly cleere,
And skin as white as snow, and dulcet eies provoking cheere?
The honour of thine heavenly sacred necke where is it fled?
With so yll lucke have these thy firstling toiles of Mars bin led?
Was this thy longing sore at parting hence the warres to see,
That in this wofull vile aray thou shouldst returne to mee?
O hatefull death which doost alone the mindes puft up in pride
With armes revenging straine, and on our kind both far and wide
All ruling beare the sway with equall law, and sparest none,
But great and small doo weary hence away till all be gone.
The vassals with their princes stout, the valient with the wratch,
The old and younge thou makest all alike, and ioynt to match.

Affection mooved from the unconstancy of worldly thinges

Discedens voluisti avidis te credere bellis?
 Heu mortem invisam, quae sola ultricibus armis
 280 Elatos frenas animos, communia toti
 Genti sceptrā tenens, aeternaque foedera servans;
 Quae magnos, parvosque teris, quae fortibus aequas
 Imbelles, populisque duces, seniumque iuventae.
 Heu mortem obscuram, quae causa indigna coëgit
 285 Eripere, atque meum crudeli vulnere natum
 Afficere? O felix tam grato caedis Amata
 Successu laetare tuae: quae tanta dolorum
 Fugisti monumenta, gravisque immania casus
 Pondera! Quid misero genitori plura paratis,
 290 O superi? Natum rapuistis, et Ardea flammis
 Consumpta in cinerem versa est: nunc aethera pennis
 Verberat: ah me, Turne, tua plus caede cruenta.
 Deerat adhuc sors ista patris suprema senectae.
 At vero tali se res cum foedere versant
 295 Ut quem infesta furens miserum fortuna moratur,
 Illum omni petat infrendens, et turbine cogat."
 Dixerat: et multa illacrimans largo ora rigabat
 Imbre, trahens duros gemitus, rapidosque dolores:
 Qualis ubi incubuit validis Iovis unguibus ales,
 300 Et parvum effuso divulsit sanguine foetum,
 Cerva videns miseri turbatur funere nati.

Postera lux latum splendore impleverat orbem:
 Tunc pater infractos fatali Marte Latinus
 Defecisse videns Italos, totamque potenti
 305 Cedere fortunam Aeneae, bellicae tumultum,
 Ingentesque animo curas, et foedera volvens
 Connubii promissa, suae nataeque hymenaeos,
 Praestantes vocat electos ex agmine toto
 Mille viros, qui Dardanium comitentur ad urbem
 310 Spectatum virtute ducem; iungitque togatos
 Multa oratores memorans: et euntibus ultro
 Imperat, ut quando auspiciis, monitisque deorum

O death most wretched vile, what case unworthy so to rage,
 Enforced thee my sun to slay with wound, in tender age?
 Amata Queene thrice happy with thy death thou maist reioyce,
 That causes to avoide so great of greife, didst take the choyce,
 And burden hugie great of cares to beare, and chaunces sad.
 O heavenly Gods, what farther greifes like this, or halfe so bad
 For me poore wretched father do ye prepare? My sun ye have,
 And quite to ashes lieth consumde my towne that Ardea brave,
 And now with wings she beates the aire: yet over this, as cheife
 Then wanting, added is of this thy blooddy death the greife.
 Of all thy fathers luckles haps this is the fortune last.
 Of Deſtnies ill for this the custome is, this is their cast.
 Looke what poore soule unto some hard mishap predeſtned is,
 On him all mischeifes feirce downe hudling fall, and do not misse.
 He said, and from his eies the trickling teares ran downe amaine,
 Deepe sighes from breast he drew, and hard at hart he prest the paine.
 As when the birde of Iove, aloft in skies with talantes kine
 That skimming seekes her pray, when of some fawne with blooddy tine
 Doth griping straine the tender corps, and off the flesh doth teare,
 The seely dambe amazed standes opprest with woe and feare.

A short recapitulation of his sorowes

The morning next with shining beames the world had overspred,
 When his Italian power, good king Latinus, hard bested
 By fatall foyle and fainting all did see, and conquest wide
 To lord Aeneas fortune willing so, went on his side.
 Revolving eke the tumultes vile that blooddy warres ensue,
 Right hugie heapes of carking cares in pensive minde he drew.
 When on his promist league he thought, and daughters wedding day:
 A thousand worthy men of choyce from all the troupes away
 He bids to call, the Troian prince of vertue most renowne
 Attending safely to conduct unto Laurentum towne.
 To these full many Oratours in gownes, with equall charge
 Instruſting much hee ioyneth in this worke with charter large.
 That since by signes and warninges great of Gods it must be so,
 That Troian with Italian blood commixed needes do go,
 They would consent with willing mindes for to perfourme the thinge,
 And Troian youth with ioyfull harts into the towne to bring.

Aeneas is sent for to entre
 Laurentum

Troianam miscere Italo cum sanguine gentem
Expediat, placido intersint animoque revisant,
315 Aeneadasque vehant alta intra moenia laeti.

Interea ipse urbem labefactam, et vulgus inerme
Componit, solidatque animos, requiemque futuram
Spondet, et aeternam ventura in saecula pacem.
Inde iubet meritos turba plaudente triumphos,
320 Sublimesque domus fieri regalis honores;
Atque alacris monet, unanimes ut fronte serena
Occurrant genero venienti, et pectore toto
Excipiant gentem Iliacam, magnisque receptent
Plausibus, optataeque effundant pacis amores.
325 Iamque instructa cohors. Teucrorum castra subibat,
Cincta comas ramis oleae, pacemque rogabat:
Quam bonus Aeneas ad se intra regia duci
Tecta iubet, causamque viae placido ore requirit.

Tunc senior sic incipiens ardentia Drances
330 Verba movet, nimium erepti pro funere Turni
Exsultans: "O Troianae dux inclute gentis,
Gloria spesque Phrygum, quo nec pietate nec armis
Maior in orbe fuit: victi obtestamur, et omnes
Iuramus deosque deasque, invitus in unum
335 Conflatum vidit Latium, et temerata Latinus
Foedera: nec Phrygios umquam turbavit honores.
Quin natae, quando superum sic vota ferebant,
Connubia, et generum magno te optabat amore.
Sed quicquid tanto armorum flagrante tumultu,
340 Tantorum furiisque operum, atque laboribus actum est;
Id rabidus Turni, et stimulis incensus iniquis,
Confectusque odiis furor attulit; ille, negantes
Invitasque, dedit Latias in proelia gentes.
Illum omnis conversa cohors poscebat, ut armis
345 Cederet, et magnum sineret succedere pactis
Connubiis Anchisiaden: inde optimus ambas

Therwhiles himself the towne in order sets, and rabble rout
Appeasing staies their mindes and rest doth promise void of doubt,
And sacred peace unto them all for ever to endure.

Then triumphes rightly due with shoutings loud he bids procure,
And honours duely to be doone in Court for every state.
And farther willes with cheerfull looke in hope of better fate
Forgetting sorowes all, his sun in law they go to meete,
And hartily from frendly breastes the Troian youth to greete,
And them with shoutings great to enterteine, and welcome make.
Instructed thus, unto the Troian tentes their way they take,
Their heades encompassed round with sacred crownes of Olive spray.
And to Aeneas courtise lord they come, and peace they pray.

Whome hee into his stately court to entre doth desire,
And cause of their repaire, with countenance milde, he doth require,

Then Drances well ystept in yeeres his grave words thus began.
(Who for the death Turnus prince did ioy not smally than.)

Most worthy prince, the glory great and hope of auntient Troy,
Whose peere for verteous deedes and armes the world doth not enioy,
Poore conquerd men for pardon wee thee pray, and sue for grace.

And all celestiaall Goddesses, and Gods, and this thy face
To witnes deepe we call, that king Latinus gainst his will
All Latium land in tumultes mad upstirde, with practice ill,
And league broake of unwilling did behold, nor honour due
To Troians did denie to yeeld misled with fancie new,

But since the Gods so would, that thou his daughter deere shouldst wed,
Thee sun in law he calde, and well did with thy dulcet hed.

But what soever fierce outrage was doone with martiall broiles,
However furies forst us to unrest, and painfull toiles,
All that did Turnus bedlem rage, and minde with Feindes opprest
Through cancred spite enforce, whose hatefull hart could take no rest.

The kingdomes of all Italy gainsaying, with yll moode
Assaying armes, he causde to entre feild, which thee withstoode.

But all the bandes did him againe request, that leaving war
He would thee let enioy thy promist wife, withouten iar.

This much did good Latinus king with dubled hands require,
Good aged man of valient hart, but hee with raging fire

The cause of the war is laid upon Turnus

Iungebat palmas defessa aetate Latinus
 Infractus, nimioque ardentem Marte rogabat.
 Nec nostrae potuere preces inflectere durum,
 350 Nec divum portenta animum; quin acrius ignem
 Spumabat ferus ore vomens, bellumque ciebat.
 At vero dignum invenit pro talibus ausis
 Exitium; qui te tandem victore momordit
 Nigrantem prostratus humum: nunc improbus aedes
 355 Tartareas visurus eat, quaeratque sub imo
 Nunc alias Acheronte acies, aliosque hymenaeos.
 Tu melior succede bonis Laurentibus haeres.
 In te omnis domus, et fessi inclinata Latini
 Spes iacet: unum omnes Itali super aurea mittunt
 360 Sidera, et ingentem bello, et caelestibus armis
 Extollunt, et vera canunt praeconia voces.
 Te gravium veneranda patrum, consultaque turba,
 Invalidique aetate senes; te laeta iuventus,
 Et cupidae matres, pueri, innuptaeque puellae,
 365 Unanimes aequo ore volunt; Turnumque sub armis
 Exsultant cecidisse tuis: te tota precatur
 Ausonia, et claris praestantem laudibus effert:
 In te unum conversi oculi: pater ipse Latinus
 Iam senior sola haec longaevae munera vitae,
 370 Qui natam tibi iungat, habet: generique nepotes
 Troianos Italo admixtos in saecula mittat.
 Ergo age, magne veni Teucrorum ductor, et altos
 Ingredere et celebres cape quos spondemus honores."
 Finierat: cunctique eadem simul ore fremebant.
 375 Quos pius Aeneas hilari cum fronte receptos
 Prosequitur paucis, et amico pectore fatur:

"Nec vos, nec placida solitum sub pace Latinum
 Arguerim: verum infesti violentia Turni
 Tantum opus, haud dubito, et tanti discrimina Martis
 380 Concivit, iuvenilis enim plus laudis amore:
 Quicquid id est tamen, Ausonii, nil pacta recuso

Of war was kindled to to much, ne could our treates prevaile
 To move his mind, nor monsters great of gods ought make him quaille.
 But rather more encenst, wilde fires from flaming iawes did spue,
 And frantickly himself, and us, to causelesse warres he drue.
 Howbeit, for his foule attemptes due recompence he found.
 For overthrowne by thee, he toare with teeth the loathsome ground.
 Now let his sinfull soule go seeke darke Plutoes seates below,
 And under Acheron for warres, and weddings there to know.
 Thou better heire far succede unto Laurentum land.
 On thee Latinus familie, and comfort all doth stand.
 Thee all the Italians with above the golden starres to reigne.
 Thee great in war, and great thy force in heavenly armes to streine
 They do extoll, and with their voice advance thy worthy fame.
 The noble troupe of fathers old, and routes right grave of name,
 The elder sort of feeble age, and lads of youthful yeeres,
 The antient dames, and tender babes, and maides not matcht with feeres
 With one consent most willing thee desire, and do reioyce
 For Turnus slaine by thy right hand, with loud triumphing voice.
 The whole land of Ausonia most suppliant to thee
 Doth make request, whom worthy most of sacred praise to bee
 They do confesse, and all their eies on thee alone are bent.
 Latinus king this only due reward for numbers spent
 Of yeeres, his daughter hath to knit to thee in wedlocke band,
 Who offspring great shal yeeld commixt of Troy and Itayle land.
 Wherefore come of with speede of Troians stout most noble guide,
 Approch the towne the honours to receive which we provide,
 When he had sayd, with humming voice the same they mutter all.
 Whome lord Aeneas first with cheerefull countnance far from gall
 Doth entreteining comfort thus in wordes not many spent,
 And on thiswise from freendly breast declareth his entent.

I neither you, nor good Latinus king, in peace of yore
 Accustomed to dwell, do blame at all, but Turnus sore
 Outragies all this stur, I do not doubt, and bloodie boile
 Did broach, whose hart to much with youthly love of praise did boile
 But howsoever, sirs, it then befell, I not refuse
 With you to ioyne in wedlocke bandes, but sacred league to chuse.

An amplification of Aeneas
 prayse

Hee excuseth
 King
 Latinus

Connubia, et sanctam aeterno cum foedere pacem
Iungere: rex idem imperium, et veneranda tenebit
Sceptra socer, statuentque mei mihi moenia Teucri,
385 Et nomen natae urbis erit, sociosque penates
Adiciam: vos communes in saecula leges,
Concordesque ingenti animo mittetis amores.
Interea, quod restat adhuc, imponite flammis
Corpora, quae duri miserandi insania belli
390 Arripuit: dehinc nos cum primum crastina surget
Clara dies, laeti Laurentia tecta petamus.”

Dixerat: et tanto affatu conversa tenebat
Ora simul, stupefacti omnes, et apertius ingens
Mirantes pietatis opus; mox robore toto
395 Congestas statuere pyras, ignemque repostis
Civibus immisere: altumque sub aethera fumus
Evolat, atque atris caelum sublime tenebris
Conditur, innumeras ex omni rure bidentes,
Glandilegosque sues iugulant, pinguesque iuencos,
400 Immittuntque rogis: latos incendia campos
Enudant; fremit impulsus clamoribus aer.

Iamque sequens clarum extulerat lux aurea Phoebum
Tunc Teucri Ausoniique omnes, mixto agmine, laeti
Consedere in equis, et gressum ad tecta movebant
405 Laurenti, atque altis erectam moenibus urbem:
Ante omnes pius Aeneas, post ordine Drances
Multa duci senior memorans; dehinc unica proles
Ascanius, multumque animi maturus Aletes,
Et gravis Ilioneus, Mnestheusque, acerque Sereſtus
410 Sergeſtus, fortisque Gyas, fortisque Cloanthus:
Post alii mixtimque Itali Teucrique sequuntur.
Interea effusi stabant per moenia cives;
Sublimesque alta statuebant laude triumphos,
Troianam cupido expectantes pectore turbam.
415 Et iam adventabant: quos laeta fronte Latinus

Of peace eternally to laſt, I willingly do knit.
 My fatherlaw ſhall wearing ſtill the crowne in quiet ſit,
 And ſtately ſcepter hold in hand: My Troians ſhall for mee
 A citie build, which by his daughters name ſhall called bee.
 And houſhold mates I more will ad, and equal lawes ordeine
 For aie to laſt, that love in ech to other may reteine.
 Therwhiles, that which remaineth yet to do, the bodies ded
 Commit to fire, whom wofull chance of frantike war miſled
 And when to morow bright in chriſtall ſkie ſhall firſt appeere,
 Unto Laurentum towne we wil repaire with ioyfull cheere,
 He ſayd, and with thoſe wordes, their mouthes amazed all they ſtaid,
 With wondring at this worke of vertue great almoſt diſmaid.
 Anon, with all their force great mountes of wood they raiſe in piles.
 Some underlay the bodies dead, ſome blow the flames therwhiles.
 Up flieth the ſmoke, which al the heaven with ſmutchie ſteame doth fill
 Then thousands ſheepe from feilde, and ſwine full fat they bring to kill.
 And heckfers large they caſt into the fires, the flames do cleere
 The feildes of corpes dead, the aire reſounds with ſhouting cheere.

Sir Phoebus now the morning next had brought with golden light,
 When Troians and Italians commixt, in ioyfull ſight
 All mounted fayre on horſeback forth to Laurent take their way,
 Unto that citie brave well fenſt with walles and turrets gay.
 But Lord Aeneas firſt before the reſt, then Drances old Infourming him of matters many one which there he told.
 Iulus next his only child, then ripe with elder yeares
 Alethes, and Ilionee right grave, and next appeares
 Sir Mneſthee, and Sereſtus sharpe and then Sergeſtus good,
 And Gyas ſtout, and ſtrong Cloanthus knight of Troyan blood.
 Then all the rout of Troians and Italians enſue.
 Therwhiles aloft the walles full thicke the townesmen throng to vew,
 And ſignes of great triumphing ioy and praiſe they reare on hie,
 Expecting there the Trojan traines approach with greedy eie.
 And now they came at hand, whom king Latinus glad of cheere
 Did well attended meete to enterteine them drawing neere.
 But when in mids of all the troupes he cumming did eſpie Aeneas prince of Troy, (ne did his fancie gheſſe awrie,

Aeneas
 and king Latinus
 do meete

Occurrens magna excepit comitante caterva.
At postquam medio venientem ex agmine vidit
Dardanium Aeneam, haud vera illudit imago:
Namque omnes super excellens, atque altior ibat,
420 Et late regalem oculis spargebat honorem
Sidereis. Tunc cum primum data copia fandi est
Et voces capere, atque optatas iungere dextras,
Incipit, et prior affatur placido ore Latinus:

“Venisti tandem, cupidum nec fixa fefellit
425 Spes animum, lux Troianae clarissima gentis,
Magnorum quem iussa deum tot casibus actum
Italia, et nostris voluerunt sistere tectis:
Quamquam humana furens nimis ausa licentia sanctas
Turbarit leges, et divum exciverit iras;
430 Quin etiam invitum totiens, meque arma negantem
Tradiderit duri perferre pericula Martis.
Factum etenim, sed nec parvo stat; numina iustas
Indignata animis misere ultricia poenas.
Nunc age, magne Phrygum ductor, quando omnis origo
435 Seditionis abest, et tanti criminis auctor,
Connubiis succede, et promissis hymenaeis.
Sunt mihi regna, iacent ereptis oppida muris:
Sola autem fessae spes unica nata senectae:
Te generum et natum tempus complector in omne.”

440 Quem contra bonus Aeneas: “Rex maxime, nullam
In te horum causam armorum, tantique tumultus
Crediderim, placidae assueto sub tempore pacis;
Et si qua est, pone hanc curam, pater optime, quaeso.
Nunc adsum, et patrem, et socerum te laetus in omnes
445 Accipio casus; magni mihi surgit imago
Anchisae, et rursum ardebo genitoris amore.”

Talibus orabant inter se, et tecta subibant
Regia, cum studio effusae matresque nurusque,

For why he far exceld the rest in height, and portly grace,
And bare a Maiestie in looke, and honour in his face.)
And when so neere they came, that ech to other speake he might,
And heare ech others voyce, and ioyntly hands in freendship smight,
Latinus first thus silence breaking, mildly gan recight.

Thou comst at length, ne hath my fixed hope my greedy minde Deceived ought. O most renowmed duke of Dardan kinde.
Whom great beheasts of Gods through dangers dread so many threst,
Would have in Italy, and in our houses here to rest.
Although the frantike furie foule of man, beyond all right
For breach of league hath wrought the wrath of Gods on us to light.
Yea, many times unwilling mee, when warres I did defie,
By craft he trained in, the dangers sharpe of Mars to trie.
This so was doone indeede, but deere it cost, for why, in ire
The Gods disdainig sent revenging paines on us for hire.
But now come on most noble Troian lord, since all the spring
Of strife is gone, and cause of fact so vile and sinfull thing,
Accept thy wife, and marriage erst promised of yore. [store.
Some realmes I have, and towne with walles full strong surrounded
A daughter eke of this my tired age the only stay.
And thee my suninlaw for native childe I take for aie.
To whom then good Aeneas thus replide: Most mighty king,
No cause in thee of all these blooddy broiles, such warres to bring
I do beleeve, accustoming in peace thy daies to spend.
Wherefore such cares atonce, good father deere, here let them end.
I now am come at last, and thee with ioy whatever chance
For father heere mine I take, and once againe for to advance
Anchises image old in thee I shall begin, and heere
Most fervently in sunlike love to hold, with dutie deere.

The second offer of Lavinia in marriage

Thus talked they betweene themselves, and into houses went
With princely state bedeckt, where fayne to see with studie bent
The Matrones grave, and younger wedded wives in thickest throng,
And fathers old, and youthes more greene of yeres the wayes along
There gazing stoode, the Troyan troupes of comly lim to see:
But most of all Aeneas mightie prince, of high degree
In birth, and cumly farre above the rest in princely face,

Longaevique patres stabant, iuvenumque cohortes,
 450 Pulchra revisentes Troianae corpora gentis.
 Ante omnes magnum Aenean, cupidoque notabant
 Altum animo genus, et praestantem frontis honorem,
 Quaesitamque alacres pacemque optata quietis
 Munera laudabant; ceu quando longus et ingens
 455 Agricolas tenuit resolutis nubibus imber
 Suspensos, curvumque diu requievit aratrum:
 Tunc si clarus equos spatioso limine Titan
 Laxet, et aurato caelum splendore serenet,
 Laetitia exundant et sese hortantur agrestes,
 460 Non secus Ausonii tam laeto in tempore rerum
 Composuere animos; et iam rex alta Latinus
 Atria, regalesque aditus intrarat, et una Optimus Aeneas, sequitur quem pulcher Iulus;
 Dehinc Itali, mixtique Phryges, tum splendida lato
 465 Applausu, et magno completur regia coetu.
 Haec inter, matrum innumera nuruumque caterva
 In medium comitata venit Lavinia virgo
 Sidereos deiecta oculos; quam Troius heros
 Virtute et forma ingentem, mirabile dictu
 470 Ut vidit, primo aspectu stupefactus inhaesit;
 Et secum Turni casus miseratus acerbos
 Qui haud parva spe ductus ovans in proelia tantos
 Civisset motus, durisque arsisset in armis.
 Tum vero aeterno iunguntur foedera nexu
 475 Connubii, multaue canunt cum laude hymenaeum:
 Dehinc plausus fremitusque altum super aera mittunt,
 Et laetam vocem per regia tecta volutant.

At fidum interea Aeneas affatur Achaten,
 Vadat et Andromachae quondam data munera, vestes
 480 Intextas auro ferat, et, quod saepe solebat
 Dum res Troianae stabant, circumdare collo
 Auratum, gemmis circumseptumque monile:
 Praeterea magnum cratera in pignus amoris

With ioyfull mindes they call, and peace obtainde do glad imbrace,
And fruites of rest long wished for do prayse. Like as a rayne, [amayn
And storme right huge that long from cloudes resolv'de down pourd
The husbandmen long time suspens't hath kept, the crooked plowe
Hath rusting lyne at rest, when strength of beasts was wont to bowe.
But when sir Titan cleare in court right fayre, his horses white
Hath loosing set at large, and skies with golden beames are bright, Profusedly they ioy, ech countrey lad another cheares.

Th' Ausonians right so, in time so good when ioy appeares,
Their mindes asswaged all. And now therwhiles Latinus king,
To loftie courtes and Traverses of state did stalking, bring Aeneas by his side, and next Iulus bright of hue.

Next whom Italians and Troians mixt in course ensue:

The court is filde with mirth of troupes that thicke them thither drue.
Therwhiles amidst the flockes of matrones grave and younger frie,
Lavinia the Virgin well attended drue her nie.

Lavinias
cumming and beautye described

Her christall eyes downe casting to the ground, whom there in place
When Lord Aeneas saw, so sad of looke, so fresh of face,
At first amazed gazing still he stooode, (most strange to heare,)
And Turnus wofull chaunce revolving deepe him touched neare.
That with so great an hope, forst forth to warres, such bloody broyles
Had mooved earst, and glad had undertane such warlike toyles.
Then were the Princes both in wedlock band eternall knit,
And Hymen songes were sung, with prayses great for Princes fit.
Then shoutinges shrill, and muttrings loude of men mount up to skies
Of such as wish them well, whose voice the court through ringing flies.
Therewhiles, Aeneas unto trustie Achates gave in charge,
The giftes which once Andromache him gave, and presents large
With speede to fetch, the garments partie wrought with silke and gold.
And which herself was wont, while Troyan state in wealth did hold,
To weare about her neck the coller righ beset with stones.
And more then these, the mighty drinking boule which Priam ones
In signe of love unto his father gave Anchises deare.
Achates made no stay, but soone these giftes with ioyfull cheare
Returning brought as he commaunded was: Latinus king
The costly boule receyveth for reward, an hugie thing.

Quem Priamus patri Anchisae donaverat olim.
485 Nec mora, iussa sequens pulcherrima portat Achates
Munera: tunc socer ingentem cratera Latinus
Donatum capit; ac coniunx Lavinia vestes
Atque monile decens: placido dehinc pectore sese
Demulcent, variisque trahunt sermonibus horas.

490 Et iam tarda epulas fugientis tempora lucis
Poscebant; mox regali convivium luxu
Effundunt, latosque alta intra tecta paratus.
Convenere omnes, strato discumbere in oſtro
Deliciis iussi, et dapibus se inferre futuris.
495 Dat manibus crystallus aquas, mensisque reponunt
Flaventem Cererem: tum laeta fronte ministri
Innumeri magno distinguunt ordine curas.
Pars dapibus reficit mensas, pars pocula miscet,
Craterasque replet: nunc hac, nunc volvitur illac
500 Turba frequens; varios miscentque per atria motus.

At puerum pater immotis spectabat Iulum
Luminibus, vultum admirans, moresque Latinus,
Et graviter puerili ex ore cadentia verba
Maturumque animum ante annos; et multa rogabat
505 Permixtas referens voces: dehinc oscula figens
Dulcia, complexum manibus iunctumque fovebat;
Et nimium exsultans felicem, et munere divum
Donatum Aenean pro tali prole ferebat.

Postquam epulis compressa fames, traducere longam
510 Incipiunt fando, et labentem fallere noctem:
Nunc duros Troiae casus, gentesque Pelasgas;
Nunc fera Laurentis memorantes proelia pugnae;
Quo primum diffusae acies; quo tela vicissim
Pulsa loco; qui primus ovans invaserit agmen
515 Fulmineumque ardens in equo madefecerit ense.
Praecipue Tros Aeneas, seniorque Latinus,

But bright Lavinia his wife, the golden garments gay,
An iewell ritche receiving tooke of gift without delay.
And eche doth other enterteyning greete with friendly minde,
And sundrie pleasaunt meanes to spend the time in talke they finde.

And now the time so late of day departing, asked meate.
When loe, the bourdes they lade with princely cates for men to eate.
And all the inner roomes with gorgeous furniture they fill.
Then all attending there, eche one to set him downe at will
On seates with purple spread they do request, on meates to feede,
And daynties to be set on bourd to serve hard hungers neede.
From christall Ewers water forth they poure mens hands to wash,
And set on bourdes good store of Manchet fine well clensde from trash,
The wayters then innumerable all, to serving bent,
Themselves to sundrie chargies do deuide with one assent.
Some see the tables furnished with meate, some cuppes do tende,
And boules to fill with wine: now here they wag, now there they wende
In troupes full thick, and through the pallace great they wander wide.
But king Latinus on the lad Iulus all that tide
Ententife helde his eyes, his face and gesture marking all,
His gravitie in wordes which from his childish mouth did fall.
His iudgement ripe so far above his yeares: and question much
With him he did, and talking too and fro much matter tuch.
At length him sweetely kossing, hent in armes embracing long,
Reioycing, happie thrice for such reward obtaind among
The Gods immortal, Lord Aeneas there he did declare,
Whose happe was such a sunne to have, of wit and vertue rare.

Description of a princely feast

When hunger staked was with meates, the slow forthsliding night
With pleasant talke to passe they do begin them to delight.
Sometime of Troyan chaunces hard to treat, and Greekish bandes.
Sometime of Laurent battailes fiercely fought with bloody handes.
Where were the bandes first overthrowne, and where they did repell
Their enimies, and who the onset first with courage fell
Upon the battayle gave, and mounted fayre on warlike steede
His glittering blade did drench with death of foes that fast did bleede.
But cheefely Lord Aeneas there, and good Latinus old
The antike deedes of noble Latine Lordings did unfold:

Magnorum heroum Latiiue antiqua potentis
Gesta recensebant, fugientemque horrida nati
Arma sui Saturnum Italis latuisse sub oris:
520 Hinc Latium dixisse, genusque in montibus altis
Composuisse vagum, legesque et iura dedisse
Et Bacchi, et frugum cultus; dehinc tecta secutum
Esse paterna Iovem utque Electra Atlantide cretus
Iasio Idaeas caeso Phrygiae isset ad urbes
525 Dardanus, ex Corytho multa cum gente profectus;
Utque insignem aquilam dono et Iove patre superbus,
Hectoreae gentis signum, illustresque tulisset
Primus avum titulos, Troianae stirpis origo.

Talibus atque aliis, inter se longa trahebant
530 Tempora; tum fremitus, laetaeque per atria voces
Alta volant, strepitu ingenti tectum omne repletur
Dant lucem flammae, et lato splendore coruscant.
Consurgunt Phryges, et cithara resonante sequuntur
Ausonii, et plausum ingeminant, seque agmine toto
535 Permiscent, variantque pedes, raptimque feruntur.

Et iam festa novem largo connubia luxu
Attigerant celebrata dies: tum maximus heros
Aeneas urbem curvo signabat aratro,
Fundabantque domos, et amictas aggere fossas.
540 Ecce autem fatum haud parvum: diffundere flammam
Ingentem, et fulgore levem, et se nubibus altis
Miscentem summo Lavinia vertice visa est.
Obstupuit pater Aeneas, duplicesque tetendit
Ad caelum cum voce manus: "Si, Iupiter, umquam
545 Gens monitis Troiana tuis terraque, marique
Paruit imperiisque libens, si numina, vestras
Si metui coluique aras, per si quid agendum est,
Quod restat, placidam felici afferte quietem
Augurio, et firmate, malisque imponite finem."
550 Talia iactantem circumstetit aurea mater

And how Saturnus shunning fast the sword of Iove his sun,
 In Italie ariving hid himselfe, whereof begun
 The name of Latium unto that land: and furthermore,
 How all the people wild, that wont to dwell on hilles before
 He brought to better life, and gave them lawes to rule them good,
 And taught them use of wine, and how to till their land for foode.
 And next, how Iove to this his fathers realme him after drue.
 Whereas on Atlas daughter, hight Eleetra, bright of hue,
 He Dardanus begat, that pierst with wrath his brother slue
 Iasius by name, and got him soone to Phrigie boundes
 From Corytus, with nations wondrous store to till the groundes.
 And how right haute of minde for being sunne to Iove divine,
 An Eagle brave hee bare, the badge of noble Hectors lyne.
 And was the first that did advaunce their grandsires worthie fame.
 And eke the founder first of Troyan blood so great of name.
 With this, and semblant talke, the time between them long they spent.
 When mumbling loud men make, whose cheareful charms to laughter bent
 The loftie roofes do reach, and all the pallace fill with din.
 Up rise the Troyans then to daunce, and Latines thick in throng Themselves adioyning come, and Troyan youths permixt among,
 At sound of harpe they trimly tread their trickes with nimble feete,
 And swiftly fetch their turnes with comly grace for dauncers meete.
 And now this weeding feast, unto the ninth day forth had run,
 When Lord Aeneas first a citie new with plough begun
 To measure put, then houses up they reare, and trenches wide [spide,
 With bankes they cast on high. When loe, a thing right strange they
 A thing right strange to tell. A mightie flame brightshining light Lavinias head to touch, and to the cloudes to reach in hight.
 But Lord Aeneas still astoined stoode, and up did cast
 His folded handes to heaven, and praying thus he spake at last.
 O Iupiter, if ever Troyan wights by sea or lande
 Thy warninges great have willingly obayde, ne did withstand.
 If we thy Godhead evermore with dread, and altars to Have worshipped, and by what ever else remaynes to do
 Or is behinde, with happy southsay bring us quiet rest,
 Confirme us sure in this, and end these toyles which we detest.

The pedegree of the Troian nation

He layeth out the platform of a citie

Se Venerem confessa, almo et sic edidit ore:

“Nate, animo pone hanc curam, et meliora capesse
Signa deum, gaudensque bonis succede futuris.
Nunc tibi parta quies, nunc meta extrema malorum:
555 Nunc tandem optatam componunt saecula pacem.
Nec flammam ad caelos perlatam e vertice carae
Coniugis horresce; at constantem dirige mentem.
Namque erit illa, tuum celebri quae sanguine nomen,
Troianosque auctura duces ad sidera mittat.
560 Haec tibi magnanimos sublimi prole nepotes
Conferet, egregiis totum qui laudibus orbem
Complebunt, totumque sua virtute potentes,
Sub iuga, victoresque trahent: quos gloria summo
Oceanum transgressa ingens aequabit Olympo:
565 Quos tandem innumera ardens post illustria rerum
Gesta deos factura vehet super aethera virtus.
Hanc flammam ventura tuae praeconia gentis
Designant; hoc omnipotens e culmine signum
Sidereo dedit: at tantarum in munera laudum,
570 Quam statuis, dicas a nomine coniugis urbem.
Praeterea sacros Troia ex ardente penates
Ereptos compone nova intra moenia, et altos
Infer ad aeternum mansuros tempus honores.
Hi, tibi mira feram, tanto urbis amore trahentur,
575 Ut vecti ad sedes alias, loca prima Latini
Sponte sua repetent, iterumque iterumque reversi.
O felix, quem tanta manent, dehinc pace tenebis
Sub placida gentem Iliacam: post, fessus et aevo
Confectus tandem Elysias socer ibit ad umbras;
580 Succedes sceptro, atque Italis dominabere, leges
Communes Teucrisque ferens: tum laetus ad altum
Te mittes caelum: sic stat sententia divum.”
Dixit: et inde leves fugiens se vexit ad auras.

Aeneas tanto stupefactam numine mentem

While this he sayd, there stooode him closely by his mother deare,
 Confessing who she was, and thus she spake with gentle cheare.
 My sunne, leave of this care of minde, and take for better blisse
 These signes of God for future ioy to thee, and not to misse.
 Now hast thou gotten rest, this is the end of mischiefes all,
 And wished peace at length by tract of time to thee doth fall.
 Ne do thou feare the flame that from thy dulcet spouses head
 To skies doth rise aloft, pluck up thine heart full farre from dread.
 For she thy name with famous issue borne shall send to skies,
 And Troyan captaynes moe bring forth to light that must arise.
 And valyant Nephues unto thee shall bring from issue great,
 That all the world so wide with vertues prayses shall repleat,
 And with their mightie power full force shall wholly it subdue,
 And draw the spoles thereof in Triumphe brave: whom glory true
 Right great, when they the Ocean have passed, shall convey
 To heaven on high: whom vertues fayne great actes for to assay,
 And to atchieve, through vertue them as Gods shall lift to skies.
 As for this flame, thy noble Nations prayse before thyne eyes
 For future time it showes, by starry fire God gave this signe.
 Wherefore, in lue of all this worthie prayse, this citie thine
 Which heare thou buildest, see that by thy wives name thou it call.
 And over this, thy sacred houshold Gods from Troyan fall,
 From fire preserved, place within the walles of thy new towne,
 And give them honours large for aie to last with great renowne.
 For these (a woundrous thing) this towne in love shall hold so deare,
 That if remooved thence to other places far they were,
 Shall of their owne accord returne unto their former place.
 Thrice happy man, whom with so good successe the Gods do grace.
 The Troyan Nation eke thou shalt deteyne in quiet peace.
 And when at length thy sire in law all aged shall decease,
 Forewearied with many yeares, and pleasaunt fieldes of rest
 Among the shadowes shall possesse a place for quiet best,
 Immediately thou his crowne and scepter large shalt guide,
 And governe the Italians, and ordaine lawes beside.
 For Troyans and Italians commixt, and glad at last Thy selfe to heaven shalt send, the Gods decree thus standeth fast.

He alludeth to the Romains conquest of Britain

She com-forteth him with im-mortalitie

- 585 Percussus, divae peragit mandata parentis:
Et iam compositos felici in pace regebat
Dardanidas; et iam decedens sceptrā Latinus
Liquerat; et pius Aeneas successerat, omnem
Ausoniam lataque potens ditione tenebat.
- 590 Iam paribus Phryges atque Itali se moribus ultro,
Et socia ingenti firmabant pectora amore;
Concordique aequas miscebant foedere leges.
Tum medio Venus exsultans se immisit Olympo
Ante Iovem; et complexa pedes, sic ore locuta est:
- 595 "Omnipotens genitor, qui solus ab aethere summo
Cuncta moves, qui res hominum, curasque recenses;
Dum Teucros traheret fortuna inimica, recordor,
Spondebas finem aerumnis, rebusque salutem.
Nec tua te promissa, pater, sententia fallit;
- 600 Namque omnes gaudere sacra tres pace per annos
Viderunt Italae nullo discrimine partes;
Verum ad siderei missurum culmina caeli
Pollicitus magnum Aenean, meritumque ferebas
Illaturum astris: quid nunc sub pectore versas?
- 605 Iamque optat matura polos Aeneia virtus."

- Olli hominum pater atque deum dedit oscula, ab alto
Pectore verba ferens: "Quantum, Cytherea, potentem
Aeneam Aeneadasque omnes, infessus amavi,
Et terra et pelago et per tanta pericula vectos,
- 610 Nosti: et saepe equidem indolui commotus amore,
Nata, tuo: tandemque malis, Iunone secunda,
Imposui finem: nunc stat sententia menti,
Qua ductorem alto Phrygium succedere caelo
Institui, et firma est; numeroque inferre deorum
- 615 Constat, et id concedo libens. Tu, si quid in ipso
Mortale est, adime, atque astris ingentibus adde.
Quin si alios sua habet virtus, qui laude perenni
Accingant sese, gestis praestantibus orbem

She sayd, and into aire departing thin she went her way.
Aeneas then, whom power so great of God did much affray,
Astained sore his Goddesse mothers heastes doth all fulfill,
And now his Troians settled well in peace he rules at will.
And king Latinus dying left his scepter, which anon
Aeneas him succeeding did possesse when he was gone.
And all Italia right large and wide did wholly sway.
Now Troians and Italians like customes to obey,
And manners did agree rightwillingly with one assent.
And fervent love in frendly breast was fixt not to relent.
And equall lawes for both they ioynctly made with good entent.

Then Venus glad, in mids of heaven foorthstanding Iove before,
Most humbly there his feete embracing, thus gan him implore.
Almighty sire, that althings doost alone from heaven direct,
That all affaires and cares of men revolving doost detect.
While Troians were with luckles fortune drawne, I call to minde
Thou promisedst them rest, and end of troubles all to finde.
Ne hath thy promise, father deere, at all deceived mee.
For that now all Italia, not iarring once perdee,
For three yeeres space in sacred peace hath seene them to remaine.
But farthermore than this, thou grauntedst, Iove, to mee againe
My great Aeneas to advance unto the loftie skie,
And him of due desert to place among the starres on hie.
What is thy minde herin as now? For why, even ripe by this Aeneas vertue longes to dwell above in lasting blis.
To whom the father of men and gods, sweet kossing, from an hie
These words drewforth from breast: How much, good daughter Venus, I Aeneas stout, and Troians all incessantly did love,
Whom perrils eft so great by land and sea forththrust did shove,
Thou knowest wel, and mooved oft, my childe, with love of thee,
I have bin sorie, greeving much in minde thy greefe to see.
Howbeit yet in tract of time, by Iunoes good consent,
I have them ended all: and now give eare to mine entent,
Which is, that I the capteine great of Troians to invest
In heaven have now decreed, and sure he shall mee seeming best
Increase the number of the Gods, and glad I do agree.

Exornent, illos rursum super aethera mittam.”
620 Assensere omnes superi, nec regia Iuno
Abnuit; at magnum Aenean suadebat ad altum
Efferri caelum, et voces addebat amicas.

Tum Venus aerias descendit lapsa per auras,
Laurentumque petit: vicina Numicius undis
625 Flumineis ubi currit in aequora harundine tectus.
Tunc corpus nati abluere, et deferre sub undas
Quicquid erat mortale iubet: dehinc laeta recentem,
Felicemque animam secum super aera duxit:
Immisitque Aeneam aëtris, quem Iulia proles
630 Indigetem appellat, templisque imponit honores.

Thou what in him is mortall take away, and make him free,
 And ad him to the mighty starres that shine in loftie skies.
 Yea, others that with vertue fraught hereafter shall arise,
 And eke themselves adorne with praise eterne not to decay,
 Fulfilling eke the world with noble deedes of glory gay,
 Those likewise will I to the skies advance. All Gods said yea
 To this, ne did dame Iuno Queene of Gods, once disagree.
 But gave advice that to the heavens Aeneas might ascend,
 With other kindly wordes, which did to love and freindship tend,

Verteous
 deeds make men immortal

Then Venus through the flittring aire descending downe did slide,
 And to Laurentum towne she goes, neere where to sea doth glide
 Numicie river drenched deepe in reede, and overhid.
 The body of her sun to wash, and mortall part she bid
 The water then to clense, and glad the happie soule on hie
 Late losed from the corpse she bare aloft to dwell in skie,
 And did amid the starres Aeneas place, whom Iulies line
 Their private God doth call, adorning him with rites devine.

DEO GRATIAS.

Per Thomam Twynum, 26. Octobris. 1583.
 Lewesiae apud Meridionales Saxones, opus furtivarum horarum plurium.

VRNVS ut extremo uitā sub marte pfudit
 Subdunt se rutuli æneæ troiana sequentes
 Agmina. de hic superis meriti reddunt honores.
 Congaudet gnato ac sociis memor ante malorū
 Astorum pater æneas. turni inde latinus
 Morte dolet. patriæ miseranda incendia daunus
 Eversæ: & cari deflet pia funera gnati.
 Connubium instaurat gnata lætoq; hymenæos
 Rex facer æneæ genero. gens utraq; pacto
 Fœdere pacis ouat: tū nomine coniugis urbem
 Instruit. & tandem placida sub pace regentem
 Transtulit æneam uenus astra in summa beatum

VRNVS VT EXTREMO

deuictus marte profudit
 Effugientem aīam. medioq;
 sub agmine uictor

Magnanimus stetit æneas mauortius heros
 Obstupuere omnes gemitūq; dedere latini.
 Et durum ex alto reuomentes corde dolorem
 Concussis cecidere animis ceu frontibus ingens
 Sylua dolet lapsis boreali impulsa tumultu.
 Tum tela infigunt terræ. & mucronibus hærent:
 Scutaq; deponunt bumeris: & prælia damnant:
 Insanumq; horrent optati martis amorem.
 Nec frenum nec colla pati captiua recusant:
 Et ueniam orare: & requiem finemq; malorum.
 Sicut acerba duo quando in certamina tauri
 Concurrent: largo miscentes sanguine pugnam.
 Cuiq; suum pecus inclinat. sin cesserit uni
 Palma duci. mox quæ uicto pecora ante fauebāt
 Nunc sese imperio subdunt uictoris: & ultro
 Quamq; animū dolor altus habet: parere fatētur
 Non aliter rutuli licet ingens mœror adhauserit
 Pectora pulsa metu cæsi ducis: inclita malunt
 Arma sequi: & phrygium æneam: fœdusq; precari
 Pacis: & æternam rebus belloq; quietem

[Facsimile of the opening lines of the editio princeps from Adam de Ambergau's Virgil, Venice, 1471]

TEXT OF THE SCOTCH TRANSLATION OF BOOK XIII BY GAVIN DOUGLAS

The following version of The Threttene Buik of Eneados "Translated out of Latyne verses into Scottish metir, bi the Reverend Father in God, Mayster Gavin Douglas, Bishop of Dunkel and unkil to the Erle of Angus," was completed in June, 1513, and imprinted at London in 1553. The present text is reprinted from The Poetical Works of Gavin Douglas, Bishop of Dunkeld, Volume IV, published by William Paterson at Edinburgh in 1874. The Thirteenth Book is summarized by Bishop Douglas as

"The last, ekit to Virgillis nowmyr evyn,
By Maphaeus, convoyis Ene to hevyn."

THE PROLOUG OF THE THRETTENE BUIK OF ENEADOS EKIT TO VIRGILL BE MAPHEUS
VEGIUS

Towart the evin, amyd the summyris heyt,
Quhen in the Crab Appollo held his sete,
Duryng the joyous moneth tyme of June,
As gone neir was the day, and suppar done,
I walkyt furth abowt the feildis tyte,
Quhilkis tho repleniſt ſtude full of delyte,
With herbis, cornis, catale and frute treis,
Plente of ſtoyr, birdis and byssy beis
In amerant medis fleand eſt and weſt,
Eftir laubour to tak the nychtis reſt.
And as I blynkyt on the liſt me by,
All byrnand reid gan walxin the evin ſky:
The ſon enfyrit haill, as to my ſycht,
Quhirlyt about his ball with bemis brycht,
Declynand faſt towart the north in deyd;
And fyry Phlegon, his dym nychtis ſteid,
Dowkyt his heid ſa deip in fludis gray
That Phebus rollis doun vnder hell away,
And Esperus in the weſt wyth bemis brycht
Vpspringis, as forridar of the nycht.
Amyd the hawchis, and euery luſty vaill,
The recent dew begynnys doun to ſcaill,
To meys the byrnyng quhar the ſon had ſchine.
Quhilk tho was to the neddir warld decline:
At euery pilis point and cornis croppis
The techrys ſtude, as lemand beriall droppis,
And on the hailſum herbis clene, but wedis,
Lyke criſtall knoppis or ſmall ſiluer bedis.
The lycht begouth to quynkill owt and faill,
The day to dyrkyn, decline, and devaill;
The gummys rysis, doun fallis the donk rym,
Baith heyr and thair ſcuggis and ſchaddois dym.
Vpgois the bak wyth hir pelit ledderyn flycht;

A dyscription of June

The lark discendis from the skyis hycht
 Singand hyr compling sang, eftyr hyr gys,
 To tak hyr reſt, at matyn hour to rys.
 Owt our the swyre swymmis the soppis of miſt,
 The nycht furthſpred hyr cloke with ſabill lyſt,
 That all the bewtie of the fruſtuus feyld
 Was wyth the erthis vmbrage clene ourheild;
 Baith man and beſte, fyrth, flude, and woddis wild,
 Involuit in tha ſchaddois warrin ſild.
 Still war the fowlis fleis in the ayr,
 All ſtoyr and catall ſeysit in thar lair,
 And euery thing, quharso thame likis beſt,
 Bownis to tak the hailſum nychtis reſt
 Eftir the days laubour and the heyt.
 Closs warrin all and at thar ſoft quyet,
 But ſterage or removing, he or ſche,
 Ouder beſt, byrd, fyſch, fowle, by land or ſe:
 And ſchortlie, euery thing that dois repare
 In firth or feyld, flude, foreſt, erth or ayr,
 Or in the ſcroggis, or the buſkis ronk,
 Lakis, marrasiſ, or thir pulis donk,
 Aſtabillit liggis ſtill to ſlepe, and reſtiſ;
 Be the ſmall birdiſ ſyttand on thar neſtiſ,
 The litill midgeiſ, and the vruſum fleyiſ,
 Laboryuſ emmotiſ, and the byſſy beyiſ;
 Alſ weil the wild as the taym beſtiall,
 And euery othir thingiſ gret and ſmall,
 Owtak the mery nychtgaill, Philomene,
 That on the thorn ſat ſyngand fra the ſplene.

Quhaiſ myrthfull notiſ langing for to heyr,
 Ontill a garth vndir a greyn lawrer
 I walk onon, and in a ſege down ſat,
 Now muſand apon thiſ and now on that.
 I ſe the poill, and eik the Urfiſ brycht,
 And hornyt Lucyne caſtand bot dym lycht,
 Becauſ the ſymmyr ſkyiſ ſchayn ſa cleyr;

Goldin Venus, the mastres of the ȝeir,
 And gentill Jove, with hir participate,
 Thar bewtuus bemis sched in blyth eſtayt:
 That ſchortly, thar as I was lenyt down,
 For nychtis ſilens, and this byrdis ſovn,
 On ſleip I ſlaid; quhar ſone I ſaw appeyr
 Ane agit man, and ſaid: quhat dois thou heyr
 Vndir my tre, and williſt me na gude?
 Me thoct I lurkit vp vnder my hude
 To ſpy this auld, that was als ſtern of ſpech
 As he had bene ane medycyner or lech;
 And weill persavit that hys weid was ſtrange,
 Tharto ſo auld, that it had nocht bene change,
 Be my conſait, fully that fourty ȝeir,
 For it was threidbayr into placis ſeir.
 Syde was his habyt, round, and cloſing meyt,
 That ſtrekit to the grund down our his feyt;
 And on his hed of lawrer tre a croune,
 Lyke to ſum poet of the auld faſſoune.

Me thoct I ſaid to him with reuerens:
 Fader, gif I haue done ȝou ony offens,
 I ſall amend, gyf it lyis in my mycht;
 Bot ſuythfaſtly, gyf I haue perfyte ſycht,
 Onto my dom, I ſaw ȝou nevir ayr:
 Fayn wald I wyt quhen, on quhat wys, or quhayr,
 Againſt ȝou treſpaſſit ocht haue I.
 Weill, quod the tother, wald thou mercy cry
 And mak amendis, I ſal remyt this falt;
 Bot, other wais, that ſete ſal be full ſalt.
 Knawis thou nocht Mapheus Vegius, the poet,
 That onto Virgillis luſty bukiſ ſweit
 The threttene buke ekyt Eneadane?
 I am the ſammyn, and of the na thing fane,
 That heſ the tother twelf into thy tung
 Translait of new, thai may be red and ſung
 Our Albyon ile, into ȝour wlgar leid;

A commoning betuix the Author and Mapheus

Bot to my buke ȝit list the tak na heid.

Maſtir, I ſaid, I heir weill quhat ȝe ſay,
And in this cace of perdon I ȝou pray:
Nocht that I haue ȝou ony thing offendit,
Bot rathyr that I haue my tyme myſſpendit,
So lang on Virgillis volume for to ſtair,
And laid on ſyde full mony grave mater,
That, wald I now write in that treti more,
Quhat ſuld folk deme bot all my tyme forlore?
Als, ſyndry haldiſ, fader, traſtis me,
ȝour buik ekȝt but ony neceſſite,
As to the text according neuer a deill,
Mair than langis to the cart the fyft quheyll.
Thus, ſen ȝe bene a criſtin man, at large
Lay na ſik thing, I pray ȝou, to my charge;
It may ſuffice Virgill is at ane end.

I wait the ſtory of Jherom is to ȝou kend,
Quhou he was dung and beft intill hys ſleip,
For he to gentilis bukiſ gaif ſik keip.
Full ſcharp repreif to ſum is write, ȝe wiſt,
In this ſentens of the haly Pſalmiſt:
Thai ar corruppit and maid abhominabill
In thar ſtudeyng thingis onprofitabill.
Thus ſayr me dredis I ſal thoill a heyt,
For the grave ſtudy I haue ſo long forleyt.

ȝa, ſmy, quod he, wald thou eſchape me ſwa?
In fayth we ſall nocht thus part or we ga!
Quhou think we he eſſonȝeis him to aſtart,
As all for conſciens and devoit hart,
Fenȝeand him Jherom for to contirfeyt,
Quhar as he liggis bedowin, lo, in ſweit!
I lat the wyt I am na hethin wycht;
And gyf thou heſ afore tyme gayn onrycht,
Followand ſa lang Virgill, a gentile clerk,
Quhy ſchrynkis thou with my ſchort criſtine werk?
For thocht it be bot poetry we ſay,

My buike and Virgillis morall bene, bayth tway.
Lene me a fourtene nycht, how evir it be,
Or, be the faderis sawle me gat, quod he,
Thou sall deyr by that evir thou Virgill knew.
And, with that word, doun of the sete me drew:
Syne to me wyth his club he maid a braid,
And twenty rowtis apoun my rigging laid,
Quhil Deo, Deo, mercy did I cry;
And be my rycht hand strekit vp in hy,
Hecht to translait his buike, in honour of God
And his Apostolis twelf, in the numbyr od.

He, glaid tharof, me be the hand vptuike;
Syne went away, and I for feir awoik,
And blent abowt to the north est weill far,
Saw gentill Jubar schynand, the day star,
And Chiron, clepit the sing of Sagittary,
That walkis the symmirris nycht, to bed gan cary.
3ondyr down dwynis the evin sky away,
And vpspryngis the brycht dawning of day
Intill ane other place nocht far in sundir,
That to behald was plesans, and half wondir:
Furth quynching gan the starris, one be one,
That now is left bot Lucifer allone.
And forthirmor to blason this new day,
Quha mycht discrive the byrdis blyssful bay?
Belyve on weyng the bissey lark vpsprang,
To salus the blyth morrow with hir sang:
Sone our the feildis schinis the lycht cleyr,
Welcum to pilgrym baith and lauborer:
Tyte on his hynis gaif the greif a cry,
Awaik on fut, go till our husbandry;
And the hird callis furth apon his page,
Do drive the catell to thar pasturage.
The hynnis wyfe clepis vp Katheryn and Gill:
3a, dame, sayd thai, God wait, wyth a gude will.
The dewy grene, pulderit with daseis gay,

Schew on the sward a cullour dapill gray;
The mysty vapouris springand vp full sweit,
Maist confortabill to glaid all mannis spreit;
Tharto, thir byrdis singis in the schawis,
As menstralis playng, The joly day now dawis.

Than thocht I thus: I will my cunnand kepe,
I will nocht be a daw, I will nocht slepe,
I will compleit my promis schortly, thus
Maid to the poet maister Mapheus,
And mak vpwark heiroyf, and clos our buke,
That I may syne bot on grave materis luke.
For, thocht hys stile be nocht to Virgill like,
Full weill I wayt my text sall mony like,
Sen eftir ane my tounge is and my pen,
Quhilk may suffice as for our wulgar men.
Quha evir in Latyn hes the bruit or glore,
I speke na wers than I haue done before:
Lat clerkis ken the poetis different,
And men onletteryt to my wark tak tent;
Quhilk, as twiching this threttene buke in feir,
Begynnis thus, as furthwith followis heir.

Explicit Prologus decimi tertii Libri Eneados; sequitur Liber decimus tertius Maphei Vegii, carmen traductum per eundem qui supra interpretem.

GAVINUS DOUGLACE

THE THRETTENE BUIK

CAP. I

Rutilian pepill, eftir Turnus deces, Obeyes Eneas, and takis thame to his pes.

As Turnus, in the lattyr bargan loſt,
Venqueſt in feild, ȝald furth the fleand goſt,
This marciall prynce, this ryall lord Enee,
As victor full of magnanimite,
Amyddis baith the rowtis baldly ſtandis;
That to behald hym, apon athir handis,
Aſtoniſt and aghaſt war all hym ſaw.
And tho the Latyn pepyll haill on raw
A felloun murnyng maid and wofull beyr,
And gan devoid, and hoſtit owt full cleyr,
Deip from thar breſtis the hard ſorow ſmart,
Wyth curage loſt and doun ſmyttyn thar hart:
Like as the huge foreſt can bewaill
His granis doun bet and his branchis ſkaill,
Quhen thai beyn catchit and all to ſchakin faſt
With the fell thud of the north windis blaſt.
For thai thar lancis fixit in the erd,
And lenys on thar ſwerdis with a rerd;
Thar ſcheldis of thar ſchuldris ſlang away,
That bargan and that weir faſt wary thai,
And gan abhor of Mars the wild luf,
Quhilk laitly thay deſyrit and dyd appruf:
The brydyll now refus thai nocht to dre,
Nor ȝok thar nekkys in captiuite,
And to implor forgifnes of all greiff,
Quyet, and end of harmys and myſcheif.
As quhen that twa gret bullys on the plane
Togiddir rynnys in bittir gret bargane,
Thar lang debait mydland quhar thai ſtand
With large blude ſcheddyng on athir hand,
Quhill athir of thame onto the battalis fyne

Mapheus
reherſis quhat things war done eſter Turnus
ſlaughter

Exhortacion to be circum-spekte in tymes cummyng in mouing of warre

Hys awyn beistis and heyrdis doys inclyne:
Bot, gyf the prys of victory betydis
Till ony of thir twa on athir sydis,
Onon the catall, quhilkis favorit langeyr
The beist ourcummyn as thar cheif and heyr,
Now thame subdewis vndir his ward in hy
Quhilk has the ovirhand wonnyn and mastry,
And of fre will, thocht thar myndis be thra,
Assentis him till obey. And evin rycht swa
The Rutilianys, allthocht the gret syte
Thar breistis had bedowit and to smyte,
With gret effray of slauchter of thar duke,
3it thocht thame levir, and haill to purpos tuke
To follow and obey, for all thar harmys,
The gentill chiftane and bettir man of armys,
And thame subdew to the Troian Enee,
And hym beseik of peax and amyte,
Of rest and quyet evirmar from the weir,
For thame, thar landis, moblis, and other geir.

Eneas tho with plesand voce furth braid,
And, standand abuf Turnus, thus he said:
O Dawnus son, quhou com this haasty rage
Into thy breist with foly and dotage,
That thou mycht nocht suffir the Troianys,
Quhilkis at command of Goddis onto thir planys,
And by power of hie Jove ar hiddir cary,
Within the boundis of Italy to tary,
And, all in vane, thame so expellyng wald
Off thar land of beheist and promyst hald?
Lern for to dreid gret Jove, and nocht gaynstand,
And to fulfyll glaidly the Goddis command;
And for thar greif weill aucht we to be war:
Sum tyme in ire will grow gret Jupiter,
And oft remembrans of the wikkit wraik
Solistis the Goddis tharof vengeans to take.
Lo, now of all sik furour and effeir

The lattir meith and term is present heir,
 Quhar thou aganyſt resoun and equyte,
 Aganyſt lawte, and brokyn all vnyte
 Of consideratioun sworn and bund or now,
 The Troian pepill sair trublit hes thow.
 Behald and se the extreme fynale day,
 To geif all otheris gud exempill for ay,
 That it mot nevir lefull be agane
 Tyll ony to contempne gret Jove in vane,
 As for to rays with sik dreid and effeir
 Sa onworthy motioun of wikkit weir.
 Now beis glaid, bruke thyne armour but pleid:
 Allace, a nobill corps thou lyggis deid,
 The gret Turnus! and, as to my demyng,
 Lavynya has the coſt na litill thyng;
 Nor thou na schame nedys thynk in na part,
 That of Eneas hand thou kyllit art.
 Now cumis heir Rutilianys, but delay,
 The body of þour duke turs hyne away;
 I grant þou baith the armour and the man:
 Hald on, and do tharto all that þe can,
 As langis onto the honor of bereyng,
 Or to bewail the deid of sik a kyng.
 Bot the gret pasand gyrdill, and sik geir
 That Pallas, my deir frend, was wont to weir,
 To Evander I will send, for to be
 Na littil solace to hym, quhen he sall se
 Hys felloun fa is kyllit thus, and knaw,
 Full glaid tharof, Turnus is brocht of daw.
 And netheles now, þe Italianys,
 That otherwys be clepe Ausonyanys,
 Ramembir heiroyf, and lern in tyme cummyng
 With bettir aspectis and happy begynnnyng
 To move and tak on hand debait or weir:
 For, be the blyssit ſternys brycht I sweir,
 Neuir nane oſtis nor þit armour glaidly

Eneas prudent and godly oracion

Eneas humanitye and gentilnes

Aganyſt þou in batal movit I;
 Bot conſtrenyt by þour fury, as is kend,
 With all my fors I ſet me to defend
 The Troian party and our awyn offſpryng,
 As, lo, forſuyth this was bot leſum thing.
 No mor Eneas ſayd, bot tharwithall
 Addreſſys hym towart hys cite wall,
 And throu the feildis ſocht full joyuſly
 To hys new Troian reſet and herbry.
 Sammyn hym followis all the rowt atanyſ,
 The piſſans haill and þongkeris of Tewcranys,
 And our the planys, glaid and wondir lycht,
 Thar ſwyft ſtedis, as the fowle at flycht,
 Throw ſpeid of fut aſſays by and by,
 And oft with bittir mouth dyd crying, fy!
 And can accus the Latyn pepill all,
 Oft faynt folkis and ſleuthful dyd thame call,
 That with thar rerd and bemyng, quhar thai fair,
 For the deray full heich dynnys the air.

CAP. II

*Quhou Eneas, glaid of his victory,
 Lovit the Goddis, and can thame ſacryfy.*

And thoct Enee the biſſy thoctfull curis
 Conſtrenyt hes, as twyching ſepulturis
 Of his folkis yslane, and bereyng
 Wyth funeral fyre and flambis according;
 3it, netheles, in his breiſt rollis and ſteris
 Ane grettar mater and largear, as efferis.
 For fyrſt the ſouerane honour, on thar gys,
 On the altarys wyth detfull ſacrifyce
 He ordand hes, and than, fra hand to hand,
 Eftir the rite and vsans of thar land,
 The 3yng oxin gan thai ſteik and ſla:
 Within thar tempill haue thai brocht alſſua

The buſtuus swyne, and the twynteris snaw quhyte,
 That wyth thar clovis can the erd smyte,
 Wyth mony pelt scheddand thar purpour blude.
 Furth haue thai rent thar entralis, full onrude,
 And gan denude and ſtrippyn of thar hydys;
 Syne hakkin thaime in taljeis, and besydis
 The hait flambis brochit hes thaime layd.
 And furth thai ȝet the wyne in cowpis glaid,
 God Bachus gyftis faſt thai multiply;
 With platis full the altaris by and by
 Thai can do charge, and wirſchip wyth fat lyre;
 The ſmelland ſens vpblesis in the fyre.
 Than throu that hald thai feſt and mak gud cheir;
 Vprays the mery rerd and joyus beyr:
 Thai dyd extoll and loving wyth gret wondir
 Gret Jupiter, the feirfull God of thundir,
 And dame Venus thai wirſchippit alſſo,
 And the, Saturnus dochter, quene Juno,
 Now pacifyit, and bettir than befor,
 Ane huge lawd thai ȝald to the tharfor;
 And eik him ſelf Mars, the gret God of armys,
 Thai magnyfy, as wrekar of thar harmys.
 Syne haill the remanent of the cumpany
 Of the Goddys thai name furth by and by,
 With hie vocis and with lowd cryis
 Lovit and born vpheich abuyfe the skyis.

Befor thame all maiſte graciſ Eneas
 Hys handis twa, as tho the cuſtum was,
 Towart the hevin gan vplift and arais,
 And ſyne the child Aſcanyus dyd enbrais,
 Sayand a few wordis, that all mycht heyr:
 O thou my ſon and only child maiſt deyr,
 In quham only reſtis thy faderis beleif,
 Quham throu ſa mony labouris of myscheif
 I careit haue, catchit full mony gatis
 Be the hard fortoun and the frawart fatis,

Eneas
 comforteth his ſon efter gret laubouris

Lo, now our rest and quyet fund for ay!
Lo, now the last and maist desyrit day,
To mak end of our harmis and distres!
Our panefull labour passit is expres:
Lo, the acceptabill day for euermor,
Quhilk I full oft haue schawin the befor,
Quhen ontill hard bargane callit was I,
This was to cum and betyde by and by
Be dispositioun of the Goddys abuife.
And now, my derrest chyld, for thy behuife,
To morn, sone as Aurora waxis reid,
To the cite of Laurent, that ryall steid,
I sall the send, as victor with ovyrhand,
To be maistir and to maynteme this land.

And eftir this he turnyt hym agane
Onto hys folkis and the pepill Troiane,
And from the boddum of his breist weill law
With soft speche furth gan thir wordis draw:
O æ my feris and my frendis bald,
Throu mony hard perrellis and thikfald,
Throw sa feill stormis bayth on land and se
Hiddir now careit to this cost with me;
Throu sa gret fervour of batall into stour,
And dowbill fury of weyrfar in armour,
Be sa feill wynteris blastis and tempestis,
Be all wais noysum and onrestis,
And all that horribill was, or jit hevy,
Wofull, hydduus, wikyt, or onhappy,
Or jit cruell or myschevus; now stad
In bettyr hope, return your mynd, beys glaid:
Now is the end of all ennoy and wo,
The terme is cumyn, heir sall thai stynt, and ho:
And, lyke as we desyrit for the best,
With Latine pepill in ferm pece and rest
We sall conione, and leif in vnite;
And Lavinia, of that ilk blude, quod he,

Quham I defendit haue in strang bargan,
 Of Troiane kine, with blude Italian
 Sammyn mydlyt, to me as spous in hy
 Sald ȝeld lynnage to ryng perpetuall.
 A thing, my fallowis and my frendis deir,
 I ȝou beseking, and I ȝou requeir;
 Bair ȝour myndis equale, as all anis,
 And common freindis to the Italianis,
 And to my fader in law, the kyng Latine,
 Obeis all, and with reuerens incline:
 Ane mychty ceptre and ryall beris he:
 This is my mynd, this is my will, perde.
 Bot into batale and douchty dedis of armis,
 ȝou for to wreke and revenge of ȝour harmis,
 Lerne for to follow me, and to be meyk,
 ȝe contyrfeyt my reuth and pite eik.
 Quhat glori is ws betyd full weill is know:
 Bot the heich hevin and starris all I draw
 To witnessing, that I, the sammyn wycht
 Quhilk ȝou deliuerit hes into the ficht
 From sa huge harmis and myschevis seir,
 I sall ȝou seis and induce now, but weir,
 In far largear rewardis mychtely,
 And ȝou rendir ȝour desert by and by.

With sik wordis gan he thame comforting.
 And in his mynd full mong syndry thing
 Of chancis bipast rolling to and fro,
 Thinkand quhou he is brocht to rest alsso
 With na litill laubouris, sturt, and panis;
 And with excedand luf of the Troianis
 Full ardently he flowis all of joy,
 Glaid at the last from danger and ennoy,
 So huge and hevy perrellis mony fald,
 Thai war eschapit, and brocht to sovir hald.
 Lyke as quhen that the gredy gled on hycht
 Scummand vp in the ayr oft turnis hys flycht,

With felloun fard wacheand the chiknis lyte,
 Thar deid mannasand, reddy for to smyte:
 The criſtit foule, thar moder, tho full ſmart
 For hyr pullettis, wyth harmis at hyr hart,
 Affrayit gretly of thar wofull chance,
 Gan rax hir ſelf and hir curage avance,
 For to reſiſt hir ſa ſcharpand hir byll,
 And with haill fors, and mycht, and egir will,
 Apon hir aduersar baldly settis ſche,
 Quhill, at the laſt, to geve the bak and fle
 With mekill payn and verray violens
 Scho hym conſtrenis, and to pik him thens:
 Hyr birdis ſine, clokkand, ſcho ſeikis on raw,
 And all affrayt dois thame ſammin draw,
 Ennoyit gretly for hir childir deir;
 And quhen thai beyn aſſemblit all in feir,
 Than glaid ſcho worthis, and thar meit gan ſcraipe,
 For that thai haue ſa gret perrell eſchaipe.
 Nane other wys, the ſon of Anchises
 With frendly wordis thus amynd the pres
 The Troian myndis gan meys and aſſuage,
 As man fulfillit of wit and vaſſalage,
 Drivand furth of thar hartis all on flocht
 The ald dreid and byrnand hevy thocht,
 That weill thame likis now thar joy and eys
 At laſt fundin eftir ſa lang diſeys;
 And it that lait tofor was tediſ
 To ſuffir or ſuſtene, and ennoyus,
 Now to remember the ſammyn, or reheryng,
 Dois to thame ſolace, comfort, and lykyng:
 Bot maiſt of all onto the gret Enee,
 Quhilk in excelland vertu and bonte
 Excedyt all the remanent a far way;
 And for ſa feill dangeris and mony affray
 The Goddis power and mychty maieſte
 With gyftis gret and offerandis wirchippis he;

Eyk Jupiter, the fader of Goddis and king,
Gan to extoll with maiſt ſouerane loving.

CAP. III

*Quhou Turnus folkis for him maid ſair regrait,
And king Latine contempnis his wretchit eſtait.*

In the mene tyme the Rutilianys ichone
The gret deid corps reuthfull and wobegone
Of thar duke Turnus, slayn, as ſaid is ayr,
Within the cite of Laurentum bayr,
With mekill murnyng in thar myndis enprent,
And from thar ene a large ſchour furth ſent
Of teris gret, as thocht the hevin dyd rane,
And far on breid did fill the eris twane
Of king Latine with cry and womenting,
That al to irkyt was the nobill king,
And in his breſt, the ſelf tyme, in ballance
Was rolling mony diuers ſelcouth chance.
Bot quhen he hard thar lowd womenting
Inceſſing mair and mair, and Turnus jing
With ſa grysly a wond throw gyrd hes ſene,
Than mycht he nocht fra terys hym contene;
And ſine this rowt, ſa tryſt and wobegone,
Full curteſly chargis be ſtill onone,
Bayth with his hand and wordis in his presens
Inionyt hes and commandit thame ſilens.
Lyke as quhen that the fomy bayr hes bet
With his thunderand awfull tuskis gret,
Throw owt the coſt and eik the entralis all,
Ane of the rowt, the hund maiſte principall;
Than the remanent of that queſting ſort,
For this onsilly chance effrayit, at ſhort
Wythdrawis, and about the maſter hunteir
With quhyngeland mouthis quaikand ſtandis for feir,
And with gret þowling doith complene and mene;

Kyng
Latynis piteful oration deploring the inconstance of fortoune, rehersinge
the great calamitys and incom-moditys of king-domes and commoun welthys

Bot quhen thar lord rasis his hand bedene,
And byddis ces, thai hald thar mowthis still,
Thar quhingeing and thar questing at his will Refrenis, and all clos gan thame wythhald:
The sammin wys thir Rutilianys, as he wald,
Gan at command debait thar voce and ceis,
To heyr the kingis mynd, and held thar pes.
Than thus, weping, from his hart ruit waill law
The kyng Latyn begouth thir wordis schaw:

O quhou gret motioun, quhat altering onstabil,
Quhou oft sys interchangit and variabil
Beyn the actis and dedis of man! quod he.
With quhou gret trubill, but tranquylyte,
Is quhirlyt abowt the lyfe of man, behald!
O dampnabill pryde and ambitioun, that wald
Bruke crowne or ceptre, prowde in thyne entent, Quhilk bene sa fragill, and nocht permanent!
O fury, O lust, that beyn our gretumly
Bred in our brestis, to covat senjery!
Thou blynde desyre insaciabill, may nocht tary,
Our mortall myndis quhidder doith thou cary?
O glory and renown of loys, in vayn
Conquest with sa feill perrellis and huge pane,
To quhat conditioun or to quhat estait
Thou sterys furth thir provde myndis inflait!
Quhou mony slychtis and dissatis quent
With the thou tursis! quhou mony wais to schent,
Quhou feill maneris of deid and of distres,
Quhou feill tormentis, gret harm, and wikkities!
Quhou mony dartis, quhou feill swerdis kene,
Geif thou behald, thou hes befor thine ene!
Allace! thou sweit venom schawis, and jit
This warldly wirschip hes the deidly bit.
Allace! the sorofull reward in all thyng
Of realmis, and thame covatis for to ring,
Quhilk costis oft na litill thing, but weir.

Allace! the hevy birding of warldy geir,
 That nevir hour may suffyr nor permit
 Thar possessour in rest nor peax to sit.
 Allace! the miserabill chance and hard estait
 Of kyngly honour sa misfortunate:
 The chance of kyngis standis onderlout,
 To mekill dreid ay subiect, and in dowl
 From thar estait to dekey suddanly,
 That all quyet and eys is thame deny.
 O Turnus, quhat avalit the to steir
 In huge bargan so and feyr of weyr
 All Italy with sik deray atanis,
 And to perturbe the strang Eneadanis,
 Constrenyng thame hard batal to assay?
 Or quhat avalis now, I pray the say,
 For till haue brokkyn, violate, or schent,
 The haly promys and the bandis gent
 Of pece and concord oblisit and sworn?
 Quhou was thi mynd to rent and all to torn
 With sa mekill impaciens on this wys,
 That the lyst move the weir, but myne avys,
 With tha pepill, sa strang, bald, and sage,
 That bene descendit of the Goddis lynnage,
 And at command of Jove the God of thundir
 Ar hyddir careit? and for to mak sic blundir,
 That wilfully, but motyve, so belyve
 Enforsit the thame from our cost to dryve,
 And for to brek the band that promist we
 Of our douchter till our gude son Ene?
 And wyth thy hand hard bargan rays and steir,
 Quhen I planely denyit to move weir?
 Quhou was sa gret folly and dotage
 Involuit in thy mynd wyth fury rage?
 Quhou oft, quhen thou to awfull batale wend
 Amyd thy rowtis, and on thy steid ascend,
 In schynand armour arrayt all at rycht,

I assait the to withdraw from fycht!
 And feill tymis defendit the and forbad
 To go the way that thou begunnin had;
 And all efferit, quhen thou wald depart,
 Amyd the yet the stoppit with sair hart!
 Bot all for nocht; no thyng mycht stinting the.
 Quhat I haue sufferit sen syne, quhou standis wyth me,
 Our cyte wallys wytnessyng fut het,
 Wyth tenementis and biggyngis half doun bet,
 And the large feildis strowit quhyte of banys,
 And haill the pissans of Italianis
 All waistit and distroyit thus. Alaike!
 The huge slauchtir and myschevus wraike,
 And all the fludis walxyn reid or brovn
 Of mannis quelling gret and occisioun;
 The lang abasit quaking feirfull dreid,
 And hard labour, quhilk in extreme neid
 I in myne age sa oft hes ondertane,
 In sa feill dangeris quhair remeid was nane.
 Bot now, Turnus, heir thou liggis deid:
 Quhar is the nobill renovn of thy youtheid?
 And quhar is thyne excellent hie curage?
 Quhiddir is went thy strenth and vassallage?
 Quhar is the staitlie bewte of thy face?
 Quhar is thy schynand figur now? Allace!
 Of thy fair vissage quhidder ar gone, but weir,
 Thy plesand forret schaply and ene cleir?
 Ha, quhou feill teris and wofull dolouris smart
 Sall thou, Turnus, rendre to Dawnus hart!
 And wyth quhou large weping, duill, and wa,
 Ourfleit sal all the cite of Ardea!
 Bot thai sal nocht behald the with sik lak
 Throu gird wyth schamefull wond caucht in the bak,
 Ne note the of na cowardys in thar mynd,
 Nor that thou was degenerit owt of kynd;
 And to thy wofull fader, will of reid,

At lest this sal be solace of thy deid,
Allthocht thy harmis dois him soir smart,
That gret Eneas swerd hes persit thy hart.

And, sayand thus, wyth teris of piete
His chekis baith and face ourchargit he:
Syne, turnand hym towart the mekill rowt,
The reuthfull corps of this ilk Turnus stowt
Bad turs away, and carry furth onon
Ontill his faderis cite wobegone;
And commandit to do the body cald
All funerall pomp, eftir the vsage ald.

CAP. IV

*Quhou Turnus corps till Ardea was sent,
Quhilk was by suddand fyre brynt down and schent.*

The Rutilianiys onon all in a rowt
This deid corps, that slane lay, start abowt:
The gentill body of this stowt jongkeir
Thai haue addressit, and laid on a rich beir;
And wyth him eik feill takynnis by the way,
Reft from Troianys in the bargan, bair thai,
Baith helmis, hors, swerdis, and other geir,
Scheildis, gittarnis, and mony stalwart speir.
Syne eftir this hys wery cart furth went,
Of Troian slauchter and hait blude all bysprent.
Furth haldis wepand Metiscus, the carteir,
As he that in the craft was nocht to leir,
Leidand the steid bedowyn all of sweite,
And chekis wait of flotterand teris greite;
Quhilk steid had careit Turnus oft tofor
As victor hame with gret tryumphe and glor
Full pompusly, apon ane other wys,
Eftir fervent slauchter of his ennymys.
3ondir otheris, about hym inueroun,
Baris thar armour and scheildis turnit down;

The remanent sine of the haill barnage
 Followys weping, knyght, swane, man, and page,
 With habundans of mony trigland teir
 Wetand thar brestis, wedis, and other geir:
 And thus wery furth went thai euery wycht
 Amyd the dirk silens of the nyght,
 Betand thame self wyth wondir drery cheir.
 And kyng Latyn, wyth all thame wyth hym wer,
 Towart his palice gan return onon,
 Wyth mynd trublit, trist, and wobegone,
 For sa excelland deid corps as was slane.
 Teris all sammyn furth jettis euery ane,
 Baith agit men, matronis, and childer lite,
 The cite fillis with womenting and site.

Dawnus, his fader, na wys wittand tho
 He suld remane to se sik duill and wo,
 Nor that his son his stalwart spreit had ȝald,
 And maid end in the lattir bargan bald,
 That thus was brocht to tovn ded by his feris
 Wyth sik plente of bittir wepand teris;
 The sammyn tyme with othir dyseis was socht,
 At mekill sad dolour and hevy thocht.
 For, as the Latyn pepill war ourset
 Into batall by Troianis, and down bet,
 And Turnus be his hait and recent deid
 Had wyth his blude littit the grond all reid,
 A suddan fyre within the wallis hie
 Ombeset halely Ardea cite.
 The biggyng of this fader wobegon,
 Brynt and doun bet, of reky flambis schone,
 And all returnis intill assis reid;
 The fyry sparkis into euery steid
 Twinkilland vpspringis to the starnis on hie,
 That now na hope of help may fundin be;
 Quhiddir so it was onto the Goddis liking,
 Or that the fatis befor list schaw sum sing

Of Turnus deid, in horribill battall slane.
 And quhen the pepill saw remeid was nane,
 Belyfe the wofull trublit citesanis,
 Thar drery breſtis betand all atanis,
 Gan faſt bewaill wyth pituus wepand face
 Of this onhappy chance the wrachit cace;
 In lang rabill the wemen and matronis
 With all thar fors fled reuthfully atonis
 From the bald flambis and brym blesis ſtowt.
 And lyke as that of emottis the blak rowt,
 That ithandly laubouris and byſſy be,
 Had beildit, vnder the ruit of a heych tre,
 Intill a clyft thar byke and duellyng ſteid,
 To hyd thar langsum wark and wyntry breid:
 Gyf ſo betyde thai feill the ax smyte
 Apoun the treis ſchank, and tharon byte,
 So that the crop doun weltis to the grund,
 That with the felloun ruſch and grysly ſound
 Thar ſmall cavernys all to brok and rent is;
 Than ſpedely this litill rowt furth ſprentis
 All will of reid, fleand thai wait nocht quhair,
 Tursand thar byrdyngis affrayitly heir and thair.
 Or lyke as that on the hous syde the ſnaill,
 Schakand hir coppit ſchell, or than hir taill,
 Fleand the birnand heit that ſcho doith feill,
 A lang tyme gan do wrassill and to wreill,
 Thirſtand faſt with hir feit onto the wall,
 And ȝit hir heid with fors and ſtrenthis all
 Frawart the fervent flambis faſt withdrawis;
 Scho ſcaldis, and wyth mony wrekis and thrawis
 Presis for to eſchew the feirfull heyt:
 Nane other wys in ſa feill perrellis greit
 Thir woful citesanis gan thame ſelf ſling,
 Ruſchand with trublit mynd intill a ling
 Bayth heyr and thar, and wiſt nocht quhar away.
 Bot maiſt of all, allace! and weillaway!

Wyth reuthfull vocis cryand to the hevin,
The agit kyng Dawnus with wofull stevin
Gan on the Goddis abuf clepe and call.

And tho amynd the flambis furth withall
Ardea the fowll, quham a heron clepe we,
Betand hir weyngis, thai behalding fle
Furth of the fyre heich vp in the air;
That baith the name and takyn our alquhar
Baris of this cite Ardea the ald,
Quhilum with wallis and towris hie ontald
Stud werely wrocht, as strenth of gret defens,
That now is changit and full quyte gone hens,
Wyth wingis wyde fleand baith vp and doun,
Now bot a fowle, was ayr a ryall tovn.

Astonyist of this nice and new cace,
And of the wonderus mervellis in that place,
Quhilk semyt no thing litill for to be,
As thocht thai send war by the Goddis hie,
The pepill all confusit still dyd stand,
Thir birdingis on thar schuldris caryand,
And movit nowdyr fut, tong, nor mouth:
And king Dawnus, for this affray onkouth,
Wyth ardent luf smyttin and hait desyre,
Of hys cheif sete distroyit and brynt in fyre
The hard dolour and the sorow smart
Haldis full clos, deip gravin in his hart.

CAP. V

*Fra that Dawnus his son Turnus saw deid,
Huge lamentatioun maid he in that steid.*

Amyd all this deray and gret effeyr,
Fame, of diseis forrydar and messyngeyr,
Com hurland with huge movyng fast to tovn,
And with large clamour fillis inveroun
Thair myndis all: quhou ane ded corps new than

Was cummand at hand, with mony wofull man,
 And Turnus lyfles laid with mortal wond,
 In feild discomfiſt, ſlane, and brocht to ground.
 Than euery wicht, trublit and wobegone,
 The blak blesand fyre brandis mony one,
 As was the gys, hes hint into thar handis;
 Of ſchinand flambris glitteris all the landis.
 Thus thai recunterrit thame that cumand weir,
 And sammyn jonit cumpaneis in feir,
 Quham als faſt as the matronis gan espy,
 Thai smait thar handis, and rasiť vp a cry,
 That to the ſternis went thar wofull beir.

Bot fra Dawnus the corps of hys son deir
 Beheld, he gan ſtint and arreſt his pais:
 And ſine, half deill enragit, in a rais,
 With huge ſorow smyte, in ruſchis he
 Amyd the rowt, that reuth was for to ſe,
 And apon Turnus corps him ſtrekis down,
 Embrasing it ongrouf all in a swoun;
 And, als faſt as he ſpek mycht, hes furth braid
 With wordis lamentabill, and thus wiſ he ſaid:

Son, the diſeis of thy fader thus dreſt,
 And of my febill eild the reuthfull reſť
 Now me bireft, quhy hes thou ſo, allace!
 Into ſa gret perrellis and in ſik cace
 Me catchit thus, and dryve quhidder? quod he;
 And vndir cruell bargan, as I may ſe,
 Now fynaly thus venqueſť and ourcum,
 Quhair is thy worthy valour now becum?
 Quhair hes the douchty conſtans of thy ſpreit
 Me careit thus from reſť and all quyet?
 Is this the notable honour and loving
 Of thy manheid, and glory of thy ring?
 Is this the gret wirschip of thine empire?
 O my deyr ſon, quhilum thou bald ſyre,
 Bringis thou ws hame ſikkyn triumphe as this?

Dawnus pitefull complaint for his ſone Turnus
 deith

Is this the rest and eys thou dyd promis
 To thy fader, sa tryst and wobegone,
 And oft ourset with ennymis mony one?
 Is this the meyth, and finale term or end
 Of all laubouris, as we desyrit and wend?
 O wais me, wrachit and wofull wyght!
 Quhou haiſtely doun fallyn from the hicht
 Thir slyddir warldly chancis drivis fast!
 With quhou gret fard ourrollyt and doun caſt
 So haſtely bene thir fatis, behald!
 He that was laitly sa ſtowt, heych, and bald,
 Renownit with gret honour of chevalry,
 And haldyn gret throu owt all Italy,
 Quham the Troianys sa awfull felt in armis,
 And dred sa oft hys furour wrocht thame harmys,
 Myne awyn Turnus, lo now apoun sik wis
 Ane lamentabill and wofull corps thou lyis.
 Now dum and spechles that hed liggis thair,
 Quhilum in all Italy nane sa fair,
 Nor nane mair gracios into eloquens,
 Nor nane so big but harnes, nor at defens!
 Son, quhayr is now thy schynand luſtyhed,
 Thy fresch figour, thy viſſage quhyte and reid,
 Thy plesand beute, and thyne ene twane
 With thar sweyt blenkand lukis mony ane,
 Thy gracios glitterand semly nek lang,
 Thy vocis sown quhilk as a trumpet rang?
 The glor of Mars in batall or in ſtour
 Is conqueſt wyth sik aventouris sour.
 Had thou sic wyll thy ſelvyn to submit
 To fervent bargan, and to dedis byt,
 Quhen thou departit of this ſted fra me,
 For to return wyth sik pompe as we ſe?
 O haiftull deid! that only, quhair thou likis,
 With thy revengeabill wappynys sa ſair ſtrikis,
 That thou thir proud myndis bridill may;

To all pepill elyke and common ay
 Thow haldis evin and baris thi ceptre wand,
 Eternaly observand thy cunnand,
 Quhilk gret and small doun thringis, and nane rakkis,
 And stalwart folkis to febill equale makkis,
 The commoun pepill with the capitanis,
 And ȝouth and age assemblyis baith attanis.
 Allace, detestabill deid, dirk and obscur!
 Quhat chance onworthy or misaventur
 Hes the constrenyt my child me to byreif,
 And with a cruell wond thus deid to leif?
 O sistir Amata, happy quene, quod he,
 Be glaid of sa thankfull chance hes hapnyt the,
 And of thine awin slauchtir be blyth in hart,
 Quharby thou has sa gret dolour astart,
 And fled sa huge occasionis of mischeif,
 Sa hard and chargeand huge wo and greif!
 O Goddis abuf, quhat ettill ȝe mor to do
 Onto me wrachit fader? sen ellis, lo,
 My son ȝe haue byreft, and Ardea
 My cite, into flambis brynt, alssua
 Consumyt is and turnyt in assis reid,
 With wingis fleis a fowle in every steid.
 Bot ha, Turnus! mar trist and wo am I
 For thy mašte petuus slauchter sa bludy:
 Wantit this last mychance ȝit or sik thing
 To thyne onweildy fader, auld Dawnus king.
 Bot sikkirly, with sik conditioun ay
 Thir worldly thingis turnis and writhis away,
 That quham the furyus fortoun list infest,
 And eftir lang quyet bryng to onrest,
 Brayand apon that cative for the nanys,
 With all hir fors assailȝeis scho attanys,
 And, with all kynd of torment, in hir greif
 Constrenis hym with stoundys of myscheif.

Thus said he, wepand sadly, as man schent,

The incon-
 stance of worldlye thingis

With large flude of teris his face bysprent,
 Drawand the sobbis hard and sychis smart,
 Throw rageand dolour, deip owt from his hart:
 Lyke so as quhar Jovis byg fowle, the ern,
 With hir strang tallonys and hir punsys stern
 Lychtyng, had claucht the lytyll hynd calf yng,
 Torryng the skyn, and maid the blude owt spryng;
 The modir, this behaldand, is all oursett
 With sorow for slauchter of hir tendir gett.

CAP. VI

*Kyng Latyne till Eneas send message
 For peax and eyk hys douchteris mariage.*

The nixt day followyng with hys bemys brycht
 The warld on breid illumnit hes of lycht:
 The kyng Latinus tho seand, but let,
 Italyanys discumfist and oursett
 By the fatale aventour of weyr,
 And weill persavit quhou and quhat maneyr
 The fortoun haill turnit to strang Enee.
 And in hys mynd revoluit eik hes he
 The huge dowl of batall and deray,
 Full mony feyrfull chance and gret effray,
 His consideratioun and hys sworn band,
 The wedlok promist, and the ferm cunnand,
 And spousal of hys dowchtir hecht withall.
 Of all the rowt ontill hym gart he call
 A thowsand worthy men walit at rycht,
 The quhilkis the Troian duke and douchty knyght,
 Quham he desyrit, suld convoy to town:
 In robbis lang also, or traill syde govyn,
 With thame he jonit oratouris in feir,
 And to thame gaif feill strait commandis seyr:
 And forther eik, quhen thai depart can,
 Of hys fre will thame chargit euery man,

Embassa-touris sent fra Kyng
 Latine tyll
 Eneas

That, sen be favouris and admonysyngis
Of the Goddis, be mony feirfull syngis,
Expedient it was the kyn Troiane
Conione and myddill with blude Italiane;
At tharfor glaidly to thame gang wald thai,
And with guid willis vyssy and assay
For to convoy the said Eneadanis
With joy within hys hie wallis attanis.

In the myd quhile, hym self full besy went,
The cite, quhilk was disarayt and schent,
To put to poynt and ordinance agane,
And the onweldy common pepill ilkane
To caus adres eftir thar faculte;
Thair myndis mesys and estabillis he,
And gan thame promys rest in tyme cummyng,
And quhou, within schort tyme, he suld thame bryng
Intill eternall peax for evirmair.
Syne chargit he the pepill our alquhair,
In joy, blithnes, solace, and deray,
Tryumphe to mak, with myrth, gam, and play,
As was accordyng, and in lugeyngis hie
Thar kyngly honour and sport ryall to be;
And merely commandis man and page,
With ane assent, blyth wlt, and glaid vissage,
His gude son thai suld do welcum and meit,
And with haill hart ressaue apone the streit
The Troian pepill, festand thame in hy
With glaid semlant, riot, and melody;
And to furthschaw seir takynnys of kyndnes,
And of new peax so lang disyrit soles.

Be this the rowt, as thai instrukkit wer,
In full gude rewle and ordinance in feir
Ar enterit in the Troianys new cite,
And, on thair heidis garlandis of olive tre,
Peax thai besocht as cheif of thair message.
Quham gentill Eneas, euery man and page,

Drances
oration to Eneas desiring hys freynship, offeris Lauinia
kyng
Latinus dochter
in mariage

Within hys palace riall to presens
Chargit convoy, and gaif thame audiens,
And of thar cummyng the causys and maneyr
With vissage full debonar dyd inquire.

Than the agit Drances with curage hoit
Begowth the first hys tounge for to noit,
As he that was baith glaid, joyfull, and gay
For Turnus slauchter, that tho was doyn away.
And thus he said: O gentill duyck Troiane,
Ferm hope and glory of the pepill Phrigiane,
To quham of piete and dedis of armis fair
In all the warld thar may be na compair;
We venqueyst folkis to witnessyng dois call,
And by the Goddis sweris and Goddessis all,
Contrar his willis sayr the kyng Latyn
Beheld the gret assembly and convyn
Of the Italyanys and folk of Latyn land.
Agane his stomak eyk, I bair on hand,
Outragyusly the kontrak is ybrokkyn,
Ne nevir he in deid nor word hes spokkyn
That mycht the Troian honour trubbil ocht;
Bot far rathar, baith in deyd and thocht,
Sen that the Goddis responsis swa hes tald,
The wedding of his douchter grant 3ou wald,
And with full gret desyre, full weill I know,
Oft covat 3ou to be hys son in law.
For all the brek and sterage that hes bene
In feir of weir and burnist armour keyne,
With sa greit rage of laubour and of payne,
The wild fury of Turnus, now lyis slayne,
Inflambit with the stang of wikkitnes,
And infekkit with hie haitrent expres,
Hes brocht on hand, and movit sa to steir;
Agane thair will to rais batale and weir
The Latyn pepill constrenyng by and by,
Quhilk thai playnly refusyt and gan deny.

Hym all the oſt, turnand bakwart agane,
 Besocht to ceys and draw fra the bargane,
 And suffir the gret Anchises son of Troy
 His wedlok promiſt enioys but ennoy.
 Syne the maiſt nobill kyng Latyn, full fane
 Hym for to breke and to wythdraw agane,
 Hys auld onweldy handis twa dyd hald,
 Hym to requyr his purpos ſtint he wald;
 For weill he ſaw, in our ardent deſyre
 Of the bargan he ſcaldit hait as fyre:
 Bot all our prayeris and requestis kynd
 Mycht nowder bow that dower mannis mynd,
 Nor jit the takynnes and the wonderis ſeyr
 From Goddis ſend with dyvyne ansuer,
 Bot that evir moir and moir fersly he
 Furth ſpoutit fyre, prouocand the melle.
 And, for syk succuidrus ondertakyng now,
 Hys awin myscheif, weill worthy till allow,
 He fundyn hes; quhilk finaly, on the land
 Thou beand victour with the ovirhand,
 Hym bet to ground hes maid do gnaw and byte
 The blak erd intill his mortall syte.
 Now lat that ilk rahatour wend in hy
 The blak hellis biggyngis to viſſy,
 Vndir the drery deip flude Acheron;
 Lat hym go ſers, ſen he is thiddir gone,
 Other oſtis or barganis in his rage,
 And als ane other maner of mariage.
 Thou, fer bettir, and gret deill worthiar
 To bair the riall ceptre, and to be ayr,
 Succeid to realm and heritage ſall
 Of Lawrent cuntre with the moblys all:
 In the alhayll the hous of kyng Latyn,
 And his onweldy age, lyke to declyne,
 His hope and all beleif reſtis in the;
 And the only, Italianis all, ſaid he,

Abufe the schynand sternys, as gold brycht,
 Full wylfull ar for till vphie on hycht.
 As maiste excelland worthy weriour
 Thai the extoll in batale and in stowr,
 Thy hevynly armour eik, with lowd stevin,
 And thy verray renoun syngis to the hevyn.
 The graue faderis of consall venerabill
 In thair digest decretis sage and stabill,
 The ancyeit pepill onweildy for age,
 The glaid jing gallandis stalwart of curage,
 The lusty matronis newfangill of sik thyng,
 Wenschis onwed, and litill childryn jing,
 All, with a voce and haill assent at accord,
 Desyris the as for thair prince and lord,
 And joyus ar that into feild, fut het
 Vndir thy wapynnis Turnus lyis down bet.
 The all Itail, clepit Ausonya,
 Besekis heiroy, and forthirmor allsua
 Doith the extoll maiste worthy, wys, and wycht;
 In the only returnyt is thair sycht.
 The kyng hym self Latinus, now full auld,
 Hys ancient onweldy lyfe to hald,
 Hes only this beleif and traiste, quod he,
 That he hys douchter may do wed with the,
 Quhilk of kyn, successioun, and lynnage,
 Be that ilk souerane band of mariage,
 Of Troian and Italian blude discend
 Sall childryng furth bryng, quhill the warldis end
 Perpetualy to ryng in hie empyre.
 Tharfor haue down, cum on thou gudly syre,
 Thou gret ledar of the Troiane rowt,
 Cum entyr in our weirly wallis stowt;
 Ressaue this worthy notabill fair proffir,
 And saising tak of honouris quhilkis we offir.
 Thus endit he; and all the remanent
 Intill a voce sammyn gayf thair consent;

Quham the reuthfull Eneas with glaid cheir
Ressauit hes full tendirly in feir,
And, in few wordis and a frendly mynd
Thame ansuerand, he carpis on this kynd:

Not ȝou, nor ȝit the kyng Latyn, but leis,
That wont was for to ryng in plesand pes,
Will I argew of this maneir offens.
For suith I wait, the wilfull violens
Of Turnus all that gret wark brocht abowt;
And I am sovir eik, and owt of dowt,
Sa gret danger of batale it was he Provokit sua and movit to melle,
For ȝyng desyre of hie renown, perfay,
And loys of prowes mair than I byd say.
And netheles, quhou evir it be, I wis,
This spowsage Italian, at me promist is,
Ne will I nocht refuys on nakyn wys,
Nor for to knyttyng vp, as ȝe devys,
This haly peax with frendly allyans,
With etern concord, but disseuerans.
The sam kyng Latyn, my gud fadir ald,
Sall hys empyre and venerabill ceptre hald;
And I, Troian, for me vp in this feild
Ane new resset and wycht wallys sall beild,
Quhilk cite sall ressaue hys douchteris naym;
And my Goddis domesticall, that fra haym
With me I brocht, I sall with ȝou conione.
In concord and vnyte all commone,
In tyme to cum sammyn athir fallowschip
Vndir a law sall leif in gret frendschip.
In the meyn tyme go to, and speid ws soyn
Onto our wark that restis ȝit ondoyn,
And lat ws byrn the bodeis, and bery eft,
Quham the hard wofull rage hes ws byreft,
And into batale killyt lyis ded:
Syne, tomorn ayrly, as the son worthis red,

Eneas wise ansure to the embas-setouris

And with hys cleir dais lycht doyth schyne,
Blithly we seik to cyte Lawrentyne.

Thus said he: and the Latynys, quhill he spak,
With vissage still beheld hym stupefak;
Of his wys gracios answeris wonderand all,
And of sik wordis debonar in speciall,
Mayr evidently gan mervell he and he
Of hys gret warkis of reuth and sik piete.
Belyve, with all thair forcis, euery wyght
Weltis doun treis grew full hie on hycht,
And hastely togidder gadderit has
In hepis gret, the funerall fyr to rays,
And thar abuf thar citejanis hes laid,
Vndir quham syne thai set in blesys braid.
The flambe and reik vpglydis in the ayr,
That of the laithly smokis heir and thair
The hevyn dirknyt and the firmament.
Thai hynt from all the feildis adiacent
Innumerabill rowch twyntir scheip syne,
And of thir akcorne swelliars, the fat swyne;
And tydy jing oxin steik thai fast,
And in the funerall fyris did thame cast.
The large planys schynis all of lycht,
And, throw thir hait scaldand flambis brycht,
Stude blowt of bestis, and of treis bayr:
With huge clamour smyt, dyndillit the ayr.

CAP. VII

*Quhou kyng Latinus metis with Eneas keyne,
And freyndly talking was thir twa betweyne.*

Be this the schynand secund dais lycht
Vprasis Phebus with goldyn bemys brycht.
Than all the Troianis and Ausonyanis,
Full blythly in a rowt assemblit attanis,
Montit on hors, and held thar ways syne

Onto the maſtir cite Lawrentyne,
With wallys hie and biggingis weirly maid.
Befor thame all rewthfull Eneas raid;
And nixt per ordour Drances, that to the king
As agit man carpis of mony thing;
Syne come his only child Ascanyus,
That otherwys was clepyt Julius;
Next hym Alethes, with mynd full digeſt,
Grave Ilioneus, Mneſtheus, and ſtern Sereſt;
Syne followis thame the forcy Sergeſtus,
Gyas also, and ſtalwart Cloanthus:
Eftir quham, mydlit sammyn, went arayn
The other Troianis and folk Italian.

In the meyn quhile the Latyn citejanis
Without thar wallis iſchit furth atanis,
That with gret lawd, in mych ſolempnite
And triumphe ryall has reſſauit Enee.
Be this thai cummyn war onto the town;
Quham with blyth front, to meyt thame reddy bown,
The kyng Latyn with huge cumpany
Thame welcumys and feſtis by and by.
And fra that he beheld amyde the rowt
Eneas cumand, the Dardan capitan ſtowt,
Hys verray figur dyd hym nocht diſſaue;
For, quhair he went, excellent all the lave
And hyear far a gret deill ſemys he,
That far on breid his ryall maieſte
And pryncely ſchynand countenans did appeyr.
And quhen that he cummyn was ſo neir
That athir gudly to othir ſpeik mycht,
And heir the wordis carpit apone hycht,
And, lyke as thai deſyrit, on the land
To lap in armys and adion hand in hand;
The kyng Latinus, as a curtas man,
With glaid ſembland thus firſt to ſpeik began:
Weill be þe cummyn finaly Enee,

Kyng
Latinus
oracion
to Eneas offerand hym hys douchter in maryage

And the ferm hope hes nocht dissavit me
Of my desyrus mynd, now full of joy.
O schynand gloryus licht to folkis of Troy!
Quham the command of the gret Goddis mycht,
Throu sa feill chancis catchit and evill dycht,
In Italy within our boundis playne
Hes destinat and ordanit to remayne.
Allthocht that mannish wanton willfull offens,
Be our malapert and ondantit licens,
In thar fury with brag and mekill onrest
The haly lawis trublit and infest,
Prouocand and commovand the Goddis greif,
So that also, quhidder me war loith or leif,
Full oft resistand and denyand the weir,
Constrenyt I was, and warpit thair and heir,
That, mawgre my heide, me behuffit sustene
The hard dangeris of Mars and mekill teyne.
Now is it endit; bot, certis, na litill thyng
Has it cost sum man sik undertakyng:
The godly power wilfull vengeans to tak,
Haifand disdene at sik deray was mak,
Onto tha wikkyt sawlis for the nanys
Hes send conding punytioun and just panys.
Haue doyn, gret Troian prince, now I the pray,
Sen baith the crop and rutys ar away
Of all seditioun and discord, I wis,
And wyrkaris of sa gret trespas and mys;
Cum and ressaue thy spows and mariage
To the promist; succeid to heritage.
Realmys I haue, and citeis mony ane
Full strangly beltit with hie wallis of stane,
And sum also that I in weir conquest,
And thar barmkynnis to grund bet and doun kest.
Bot only the beleif and beld, quod he,
Of my wery age and antiquite,
A douchtir haue I, quhilk suld be myn ayr:

Quharfor in tyme cummyn for euermayr
I the ressaue, and haldis in dantie,
As son in law and successour to me.

To quham the gentill Eneas reuerently
This ansuer maid agane, and said in hy:
Maist ryall kyng, all tyme accustumate
To lyf in plesand pece, but all debait,
Of this weirfair and sa gret stryfe, quod he,
I trastit evir thar was no wyte in the;
Tharfor, my derrest fader, I the pray,
Do all sik dowsis of suspicioun away,
Gyf ony sik thochtis restis in thy mynd,
And trastris weill Enee afald and kynd.
Now am I present, reddy as þe wald,
Thou þou ressavis and fra thens sall hald
As fader in law, and in all chance, per de,
As verray fader that me bygat, but le.
The figour of the gret Anchises ded
I se heir present to me in this sted;
And I agane in fervent hayt desyre
þow for to ples, my fader, lord, and syre, Sall byrn in lufe, as sum tyme wont was I
Towartis hym me engendryt of his body.

Eneas
gentil ansuere

CAP. VIII

*Heyr Eneas, that worthy nobill knyght,
Was spowsit with Lavinia the brycht.*

With sikkyn sermond athir othir grat,
And sammyn to the cheif palice with that Thai held in feir: than mycht thou se with this
The matronis and þong damysellis, I wys,
That gret desyre has sik thing to behald,
Thryng to the stretis and hie wyndoys thik fald;
The agit faderis, and the þing gallandis,
Per ordour eik assemlyt reddy standis

A commen-datione of Eneas

In gret rowttis, to vissy and to se
The gudly personys of the Troiane menȝe.
Bot specialy, and first of all the laif,
The gret capitane Enee notat thai haif,
Attentfully behaldand euery wycht
Hys stowt curage, hys byg statur and hycht,
And in thar mynd comprysit his kyn maiste hie,
His plessand vissage, and knychtly large bonte;
And, glaid and joyfull, extoll and loif thai can
The gret apperans of guid in sik a man,
And sa fair geiftis and beleif, but les,
As thai desyrit, of finale rest and pece.
Lyke as, quhen the gret ithand weit or rayne,
From the clowdis furth ȝet our all the plane,
Haldis the husbandis idill aganys thair will,
Lang with his crukit beyme the plewch lyis still;
Syne, gif brycht Tytan list do schaw his face,
And with swift curs far furth a large space
Dois cach hys stedis and his giltyn chayr,
And kythis hys goldyn bemys in the ayr,
Makand the hevynnis fayr, cleyr, and scheyne,
The weddir smowt, and firmament serene;
The landwart hynys than, baith man and boy,
For the soft sessoun ourflowis full of joy,
And athir otheris gan exhort in hy
To go to laubour of thair husbandry.
Nane other wys the pepill Ausonyane
Of this glaid tyme in hart wolx wounder fayne.

Eneas resaued in the Kingis palyce

Be this the kyng Latyn, lord of that land,
With mayste nobill Eneas hand in hand,
Within the cheif palys, bayth he and he,
Ar entryt in the saill ryall on hie;
Quham followys nixt the ȝyng Ascanyus fayr,
That was hys faderis only child and ayr;
Syne folk of Itail, mydlyt with Troianis,
Ar entrit in that riall hall atanis.

With pompos feſt and joyus myrth our all
 Reſoundis tho baith palice, bour, and hall,
 And all the chymmys riall rownd abowt
 Was fyllyt with thar tryne and mekill rowt.
 And tharwithall, of chalmyr by and by,
 With ſa gudly a ſort and cumpany
 Of ladeis fair and damysellis onwed,
 Innumerabill almaiſt, als furth was led
 The fair freſch Lauinia the may,
 Amyd thame ſchynand in hir ryall array;
 The cryſtall bemys of hir ene twane,
 That as the brycht twynkland ſternis ſchane,
 Sum deill eſchamyt, towart the erth doith hald.
 Quham as this Troian prynce firſt gan behald,
 Of beute, ſchape, and all afferis, perfay,
 Sa excelland that woundir war to ſay,
 At the firſt blenk aſtonyſt half wolx he,
 And muſyng hovirris ſtyll on hir to ſe;
 And in hys mynd gan rew the hard myſchance
 Of Turnus, quham na litill apperans
 Sa baldly movit to dereyne bargane,
 To rais the weir, and fecht for ſykyn ane:
 For weill, he thocht, the hope of ſik a wicht
 To dedys of armys aucht conſtreyn ony knyght.

Lauinia

Syne, to abbryge our mater, hand in hand
 Thai war coniunct intill eternall band
 Of matrimonye; and tho at all devys
 Thar wedlok with honour, as was the gys,
 By menſtrallis and herraldis of greit fame
 Was playd and ſung, and throw the cowrt proclame.
 Than joy and myrth, with dansyng and deray,
 Full mery noys, and ſovndis of gam and play,
 Abuf the brycht ſtarnis hie vpwent,
 That ſemyt for to pers the firmament,
 And joyus vocis ryngis furth alſo
 Our all the palys ryall to and fro.

Mariage made betuix
 Eneas and Lauinia

And syk ryot induryng amyð the pres,
 Ene thus carpis to traiste Achates,
 And bad hym go belyve, but mayr delay,
 Do fech the rych robbis and array,
 The fresch attyre, and all the precyus wedis,
 Wrocht craftely, and weif of goldin thredis
 Quhilum be fair Andromachais hand,
 By quham thai war hym gevyn in presand;
 And eik the collar of the fyne gold brycht,
 With precyus stanis and with rubeis pycht,
 Quham scho also abowt hir hals quhyte
 Was wont to were in maište pompe and delyte,
 Quhill that the Troian weilfar stud abuife;
 The gret cowpe eyk, the quhilk in syng of luife
 Quhilum kyng Priam to hys fader gave,
 Auld Anchises, of fyne gold weill engrave.
 Than, but delay, Achates at command
 Brocht thir rych gyftis, a wounder fair presand:
 Syne to hys fader in law, the kyng Latyn,
 The precyus cowp gave he of brycht gold fyne,
 And to hys spows, Lavinia the may,
 The wedis ryall and the collar gay.
 Than athir dyd thar dewly obseruans
 With breistis blyth and plesand dalyans,
 To feſtyng, entertenyr, and cherys
 Thar feris abowt on the maiſt guidly wys.
 With diuers sermond carping all the day,
 Thai ſhort the houris, and dryvis the tyme away.

CAP. IX

Greit myrth and ſolace was maid at the feſtis, Rehersand mony hiſtories ald and geſtis.

Be this it walxis layt towart the nycht,
 And faſt declyning gan the days lycht,
 The tyme requyring, efter the ald maneir,

To go to meit and syt to the suppeir.
 Onon the bankat and the mangeory
 For fest ryall according, by and by,
 With all habundans pertenyng to syk thyng,
 As weill efferit in the hows of ane kyng,
 Wyth alkyn maneir ordinans was maid
 Amyd the hallis heich, lang, and braid,
 Apparellit at all devys and array.
 Onto the bankat haill assemblit thai,
 And on the carpettis spred of purpoure fyne
 To tablis set, quhar thai war servit syne
 With alkyn danteys, and with metis seyr,
 That all to rakkyn prolixit war to heyr:
 As quhou the crystall eweris to thair handis
 The watir gave, and quhou feill servandis standis
 To mak thame ministratioun in all curys;
 And quhou thai trasying on the large fluris
 Wyth blyth vissage intill euery steid,
 And quhou that first on burdis thai sett breid.
 Sum with mesys gan the tabillis charge;
 Ane other sort doith set in all at large
 The cowpis greit and drynkyn tassis fyne,
 And gan do skynk and byrll the nobill wyne,
 That to behald thame walkin to and fro
 Throw the rowme hallis, and sa bessy go,
 And thame at tabillis makand sa glaid cheir,
 A paradice it was to se and heyr.

The Banket

Bot with hys ene onmovit Latyn kyng
 Gan fast behald the child Ascanyus ying,
 Wondrand on his efferis and vissage,
 And of the speche and wordis grave and sage
 Of sik a childis mowth sik wys suld fall,
 And of his digest and reddy wit wythall,
 Befor the æris of maturite.
 And of feill thingis hym demandis he,
 Athir to other renderand mony a saw;

A commen-dacioun of Ascanus

And syne wald he alsso, ane other thraw,
 Full tendirly do kys his lusty face,
 And lap hym in hys armys and embrace;
 And, wondirly reiosit, declare wald he
 Happy and to the Goddis bedettit Ene, Quhilk hym had gevin sik a child as that.

And quhillis thai thus at the supper sat,
 Eftir that with sa mony danteis seyr
 Thar appetit of metis asswagit were,
 With commonyng and carpyng euery wycht
 The lang declinand and ourslippand nycht
 Gan schape full fast to mak schort and ourdryve:
 Now the Troianis hard aventouris belyve
 Rehersyng our, and all the Grekis slycht;
 Now the fers bargan and the awfull fycht
 Of Lawrent pepille calling to thar mynd;
 As quhou, and quhar, quham by, and be quhat kynd,
 The ostis first discumfist war in feild,
 And quhar that athir rowtis vndir scheild,
 With dartis casting, dynt of swerd and mais,
 Constrenyt was to fle in syk a place,
 And leif the feild; and quha best dyd hys det,
 Quha bald in stowr eik maid the fyrst onset,
 And quha first, on ane startland cursour guide,
 Hys burnist brand bedyit with red bluide.
 Bot principaly Eneas, Troiane bald,
 And Latynus the kyng sage and ald,
 Of conquerouris and soueran pryncis dyng
 The gestis can rehers fra kyng to kyng,
 Twichyng the stait, quhilum be days gone,
 Of Latium that mychty regioune:
 Quhou vmquhile Saturn, fleand his sonnis brand
 Lurkit and dwelt in Italy the land,
 Be quhilk rayson he did it Latium call;
 That kynd of pepill, dwelt skatterit our all
 In montanis wild, togyddir maid conveyne,

Ald history is rehersit

And gaif thame lawis and statutis, and full beyne
 Twacht thame to grub the wynis, and al the art
 To eyr, and saw the cornys, and ȝok the cart;
 And quhou the gret Jupiter, God devyne,
 To this his faderis resset socht hes syne;
 And quhou that he engenerit thair alsua
 On Atlas douchter, the fair wench Electra,
 Schir Dardanus, that eftir, as thai sayn,
 Hys awyn brother Jasyus hes slayn;
 Syne from the cyte Choryte in Italy
 To sey is went with a greit company,
 And gan arrayve eftir in Phrigia,
 And belt the cyte on the mont Ida;
 And quhou that he, in syng, for hys baneir,
 From Jupiter ressaut, hys fader deyr,
 The fleand egill displayit fayr and plane,
 And knawyn takyn to pepill Heſtoriane,
 As the firſt nobill armys and enſenȝe,
 Baith of the Troian anciſtre and menȝe
 By hym erekkit and vprasit ſtud,
 Was firſt begun, and cheif ſtok of that blude.

Thus, with syk maner talkyn, euery wycht
 Gan dryvyn our and ſchortis the lang nycht.
 Tharwith the bruyt and nois rays in tha wanis,
 Quhill all the large hallis rang attanis
 Of mannys voce and ſound of inſtrumentis,
 That to the ruyf on hie the dyn vp went is.
 The blesand torchys ſchayn and ſergis brycht,
 That far on breid all lemys of thair lycht;
 The harpis and the githornis playis attanis:
 Vpſtart Troianis, and ſyne Italianis,
 And gan do dowbill brangillis and gambatis,
 Dansys and rowndis traysyng mony gatis,
 Athir throu other reland, on thair gys.
 Thai fut it ſo that lang war to devys
 Thair haſty fair, thair revellyng and deray,

Thar morisis and syk riot, quhill neir day.
 Bot for to telling quhou with torch lycht
 Thai went to chalmer, and syne to bed at nycht,
 Myne author list na mensioun tharof draw:
 Na mair will I, for sik thingis bene knaw;
 All ar expert, eftir new mariage,
 On the first nycht quhat suld be the subcharge.

C A P. X

*Eneas foundis a wallit toun and squair;
 Quhamto Venus can diuers thingis declair.*

Eneas foundis a toun callit Lauinia
 eftir his wiffis name

And thus thai festing days nyne at all,
 With large pompe and kyngly apparall,
 Accordyng sik a spowsage as was this.
 And, quhen the tent morrow cummyng is,
 Than this ilk souerane and mašte douchty man,
 Eneas, for to found his toune began.
 First gan he mark and cirkill with a plewch
 Quhar the wallis suld stand, thar drew a sewch:
 Syne Troianis foundis tenementis for thame self,
 Add gan the fowceis and the dychis delf.

Bot lo, onon, a wounder thing to tell!
 Ane huge bleis of flambis braid doun fell
 Furth of the clowdis, at the left hand straucht,
 In maner of a lychtnyng or fyre flaucht,
 And dyd alicht rycht in the sammyn sted
 Apon the crown of fair Lavinias heid;
 And fra thyne hie vp in the lyft agane
 It glaid away, and tharin dyd remane.
 The fader Eneas astonist wolx sum deill,
 Desyrus this syng suld betakyn seill;
 His handis bayth vphevis towartis hevin,
 And thus gan mak hys boyn with myld stevin:

Eneas
 oracioun to Jupiter

O Jupiter, gif euer ony tyme, said he,
 The Troian pepill, bayth by land and see,

Thyne admonitionis, command, and impyre,
 Obeyt has, page, man, or syre;
 Or gif that I ȝour power and godhed
 Dreid, and adornyt intill ony sted ȝour altaris, or ony wirschip did tharto;
 And be that thing ȝit restis for to do,
 Gif ony thyng behynd ȝit doith remane;
 With this ȝour happy takyn augurian
 ȝeld ws ȝour plesand rest and ferm pes,
 Mak end of all our harmys, and caus thame ces.

As he sik wordis warpis owt that tyde,
 Hys goldyn modir apperis hym besyde,
 Confessand hir to be the fair Venus,
 And with hir blissyt mowth scho carpis thus:
 Son, do sik thocht and dreid furth of thy mynd,
 Ressaue thir godly syngis in bettir kynd,
 And joyusly enioys, my awin Enee,
 The gret weilfair fra thens sal betyd the.
 Now is thy rest and quiet fund and kend,
 Now of thy harmys is cummyn extreme end;
 Now at the last, as thou desyris, perfay,
 This world with the sal knyht vp peax for ay.
 Abhor thou nocht the fyre and flambis brycht,
 From thy deir spowsys heid glaid to the hycht,
 Bot constantly thy mynd thou now addres;
 It sal be scho, I the declair expres,
 That sall with blude riall thy douchty name,
 Thy successioun, renowne, and nobil fame,
 And Troiane princis, of thy seid descend,
 Abuife the clowdis hie and sternys send.
 Scho sall of thy lineage, my son Enee,
 Bair childryng full of magnanymyte,
 Of quhais offspring sik men sall succed,
 That all this large world far onbreid
 With thar excelland wirschip sall fulfill,
 And by thair mychty power, at thair will,

Venus
 oration to hir son
 Eneas promising him immortalitye

As conquerouris, ondir thair senjeory
 Subdew and rewle this warldis monarchy;
 Of quham the schynand souerane gloir sall wend,
 And far beyond the ocean see extend,
 Makand thame equale with the hevynnis hie:
 Quham, finaly, thar ardent gret bonte
 And soueran vertu, spred sa far onbreid is,
 Eftir innumerabill sa feill douchty dedis,
 Sall mak thame Goddis, and thame deify,
 And thame vpheys full hie abuife the sky.
 This flambe of fyre the wirschip and renowne
 Doith signify of thy successioun;
 The God almychty from his starrit hevin
 Has schawin tharfor this syng of fyry levin:
 Tharfor, in recompens of sikkin thyng,
 And sa mekill wirschip of hir sal spring,
 This cite, quhilk thou closis with a wall,
 Eftir thy spowsis name cleip thou sall.
 And forthir eik, the Goddis quhom thou hynt
 Of Troye, that tyme quhen it in flambys brynt,
 Penates, or the Goddis domesticall,
 Thou set also within the sammyn wall:
 Tharin thou gar thame sone be brocht in hy,
 In hie honour and tyme perpetually
 Thar to remane, eternallie to duell.
 I sall to the of thame a wondir tell.
 Thai sall sa strangly luif this new cite,
 That, gyf thame happynis careit for to be
 Tyll ony wther sted or place thairby,
 All be thame self agane full haestely
 Thai sall return to this ilk towne of thyne,
 That thou beildis in boundis of kyng Latyne:
 3a, quhou oft sys that thai awaye be tane,
 Thai sal return hamewart agane ilkane.
 O happy cite, and weill fortunat wall,
 With quham sa gret rellykis remane sall,

Quharin thou sall in tyme to cum, but les,
 Govern the Troian folk in plesand pece!
 Eftir this at laſt Latyne, thy fader in law,
 Wery of his lyfe, and far in age ydraw,
 Doun to goſtis in the campe Elyse
 Sall wend, and end his dolly days, and de:
 Onto his ceptre thou sall do ſucceed,
 And vnder thy ſenjeory, far onbreid,
 Sall weld and led thir ilk Italianys,
 And common lawis for thame and the Troianis
 Statut thou sall; and syne thou sall ascend,
 And vp to hevin glaidly thy ſelf ſend.
 Thus ſtandis the Goddis ſentens and decretit.

Na mair ſcho ſaid; bot, as the gleym doith gleit,
 From thens ſcho went away in the ſchyre ayr,
 I wait nocht quhidder, for I come neuer thair.
 Enee aſtoniſt, havand hys mynd ſmyte
 With syk promys of renown and delyte,
 Hys bliſſyt moderis command gan fulfill:
 And now at plesant reſt, at his awin will,
 The Troian pepill rewlit he in pece.

With this the kyng Latynus can deces,
 And left the ceptre vacand to his hand.
 Than the reuthfull Ene our all the land
 Of Italy ſucceedis in his ſteid,
 And gan full large boundis in lordschip leid,
 That halely obeyt to his wand,
 And at his lykyng rewlit all the land.
 Now equaly of fre will euery ane,
 Baith pepille of Troy and folk Italian,
 All of a rite, maneris and vsans,
 Becummyn ar freyndly but discrepans;
 Thar myndis and thar breiſtis in amite,
 In ferm concord and gret tranquillite,
 Gan leif at eys, confiderat in ally,
 As vndir a law ſammyn coniunct evinly.

Kyng
 Latine
 deys, and lewis hys kyngdome and hys dochter
 to Eneas

*Quhou Jupiter, for Venus cause and luife,
Has set Eneas as God in hevin abuife.*

Venus with this, all glaid and full of joy,
Amyd the hevinly hald, rycht myld and moy,
Befor Jupiter down hir self set,
And bayth hir armys abowt hys feit plet,
Enbrasyng thame and kyssand reuerently;
Syne thus with voce expres scho said in hy:

Venus
oracion
to Jupiter, desyryng hys sone to be resauyt in heuyn

Fader almychty, that from thy hevylny ryng
At thy plesour rewlis and steris al thyng,
That manis dedys, thochtis, and aventuris,
Reknys and knawys, and therof hes the curis;
Weill I ramember, quhen that the pepille Troian
With hard onfrendly fortoun was ourtane,
Thou promyst of thar laubouris and distres
Help and support, and eftir deseis soles.
Nowdir thy promys, fader, nor sentence
Hes me dissauyt: for lo, with reuerence
All the faderis of Italy hes se,
But discrepans, fully thir ȝeris thre,
In blyssyt peax my sonne enioys that land.
Bot certis, fader, as I vnderstand,
Onto the starnyt hevylny hald on hie
Thou promyst rays the mayste douchty Enee,
And, for hys meryt, abufe thy schynand sky
Hym for to place in hevin, and deify.
Quhat thochtis now doith rollyng in thy mynd?
Sen, ellys, doith the vertuus thewes kynd
Of this rewthfull Eneas the requyr
Abuf the polys brycht to rays that syre.

Jupiters answere
to Venus

The fader tho of men and Goddis all
Gan kys Venus hys child, and thairwithall
Thir profund wordis from hys breist furth braid:
My deir douchtir Citherea, he said,

Thow knowys quhou strangely the mychty Enee,
 And the Eneadanis all of his menȝe,
 Ithandly and onyrkyt luiffit haue I,
 On see and landis cachit by and by
 In perrellis seir, and quhou that oft tyme eik,
 Haifand piete of the my douchtyr meik,
 For luif of the, for thar dyseys was wo:
 And now I haue, lo, finaly alsso
 All thar harmys and ennoy brocht till end,
 And maid Juno, as that full weill is kend,
 For to becum frendly and favorabill.
 Now lykis me, forsuyth, all ferm and stabill
 My sentens promyst to complet, quod he,
 Quhen that the riall Troian duke Ene
 Amang the hevynnys institut I sall,
 And hym to numbir of the Goddis call.
 All this I grant with gud willis perfay:
 Tharfor, se that thou clenge and do away,
 Gif thar be in hym ony mortall thyng,
 And syne abuif the starnys thou him bryng.
 I sall alsso heich ony of his kyn,
 Quhilk of thar proper vertu list do wyn
 Perpetuall lovyngis by dedis honorabill,
 And doith contempn the wrachit warld onstabill;
 Thame in lykewys abufe the hevynnis hie
 I sal do place and deify, quod he.

God promotis euer verteous mene

The Goddis abufe alhaill gaif thair consent,
 Nor ryall Juno, at that tyme present,
 Lyst not contrary, bot gan perswaid full evin
 To bryng the greit Ene vp to the hevin,
 And freyndly wordis of hym carpis thair.
 Than Venus slaid discendand throw the ayr,
 And socht onto the feildis Lawrentane,
 Neir by quhar that Numycus throu the plane,
 That fresch ryver, flowis to the see,
 Dekkit abowt with redis growand hie;

Eneas saul resaued in heuy

Quharin the body of hir son sa deyr
Scho maid do wesch, and vnder the stremis cleyr
All that was mortale or corruptibill thyng
Gart do away; and syne, at hir lykyng,
The recent happy sawl with hyr hynt sche,
And bair it vp abuf the ayr full hie
Onto the hevyn, quhar reuthfull Eneas
Amyd the starnys chosin hes his place:
Quham the famyll and kynrent Juliane
Doith clepe and call amangis thame euery ane
Indigites; quhilk is als mekill to say
As God induellar at thar sudiornis ay;
And, in remembrance of this ilk turne,
Thai gan hys templis wirschip and adorne.

CONCLUSIO

Explicit Liber decimus tertius Aeneados.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

LIST OF THE WRITINGS OF MAPHAEUS VEGIUS

LIST OF IMPORTANT WORKS CONSULTED

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WRITINGS OF MAPHAEUS VEGIUS

Chronological list of the writings of Maphaeus Vegius prepared by Luigi Raffaele and printed in a study originally intended to commemorate the fifth centenary of Vegius' birth in 1907. The work did not, however, issue from the press until 1909. Starred titles are in prose.

1. Pompeiana (Ex Villa Pompeiana 1423)
2. Libri XII Aeneidos Supplementum (Papiae, VI idus octobris 1428)
3. Convivium Deorum (Papiae, kal. februarii 1430)
4. Astyanax (Papiae, idibus iuniis 1430)
5. Elegiarum Libri Duo (1431?)
6. Velleris Aurei Libri IV (Papiae, kal. septembris 1431)
7. Rusticalia (Ex Villa Pompeiana kal. octobris 1431)
- *8. De Verborum Significatione (Ex Papia, idibus marciis 1433)
9. Antoniodos Libri IV (Bononiae, idibus marciis 1433—Papiae, IV idus martii 1436)
10. Libri Distichorum Duo (Florentiae, kal. iuniis 1439—1443)
11. Epigrammaton Libri Duo (1439—1443)
- *12. De Liberorum Educatione et Claris Moribus Libri VI (Romae, nono kal. ianuarii 1444)
- *13. Dialogus Veritatis et Philalethis (Florentiae, 1444?)
- *14. De Felicitate et Miseria (Florentiae, 1445?)
- *15. De Vita et Obitu B. Petri Caelestini Quinti Papae (Romae, IV nonas mai 1445)
- *16. Disceptatio inter Terram, Solem et Auram (Romae, idibus ianuarii 1452)
- *17. De Perseverantia Religionis (Romae, idibus iuniis 1448)
18. Laudatio B. Monicae (Florentiae, V. kal. septembris 1451)
- *19. De Quattuor Hominis Novissimis Morte, Iudicio, Inferno et Paradiso, Meditationes (1453—1458)
- *20. Vita et Officium B. Augustini (Fabriani, 1453—1458)
- *21. Officium Conversionis B. Augustini (Fabriani, 1453—1458)
- *22. Vita et Officium B. Monicae (Fabriani, 1453—1458)
- *23. Officium Translationis B. Monicae (Romae, apud sanctum Petrum 1453—1458)
- *24. Vita et Officium B. Nicolai Tolentinatis (Romae, apud sanctum Petrum 1454—1458)
- *25. De Vita et Obitu B. Monicae ex Verbis S. Augustini (Romae, apud sanctum Petrum 1453—1458)
- *26. De Vita et Obitu atque Officio B. Bernardini (Romae, apud sanctum Petrum kal. iunii 1453)
27. Poesie Religiose (1453—1458)
28. Salutatio B. Monicae (1453—1458)

29. Ad Salvatorem Nostrum in Sepulcro Positum (1453-1458)
30. Ad Eundem in Cruce Positum (1453-1458)
31. Psalmi Poenitentiales ex Davide Traducti (1453-1458)
32. Responsio Apollinis e Graeco in Latinum Traducta
33. Orpheus ex Graeco in Latino
34. Congratulatio Victoriae Pugnae Lucensis ad Nicolaum Piceninum
35. Congratulatio Victoriae Pugnae Navalis et Pugnae Terrestris Vallis Tellinae
36. Ad Caesarem Sigismundum
37. Ad Antonium Pisanum
38. Laus Primae Aetatis Aureae
39. Epigramma De Oratore Ciceronis
40. De Hirundine
41. Poesie Varie Minori
42. Prosopopoeia Catulae ad Quendam Spectabilem Dominum
43. Carmina Orphei Translata de Graeco in Latinum
44. Epitaffii Varii
45. Ad Maecenatem
46. Ad Comitem Antonium Pisanum
47. Ad Philippum Mariam Anglum Ducem Mediolanensium
48. Ad Comitem Franciscum Sfortiam
49. Ad Piceninum
50. Viro Generoso et Sacrarum Legum Militi Eruditissimo D. Francisco Vice Comiti
51. Epistola Elego Carmine
52. Ad Marrasium Siciliensem Epistola
53. Epistola Responsiva
- *54. De Rebus Antiquis Memorabilibus Basilicae S. Petri, Romae (1455-1457)

LIST OF THE MORE IMPORTANT WORKS CONSULTED

- Acta Sanctorum*, JANNING, CONRAD. Revised by Carnaudet, Paris and Rome, 1867.
Containing "Life of Maphaeus Vegius" by Janning and Vegius' essay on San Bernardino of Siena as well as his treatise, "De Rebus Memorabilibus Antiquae Basilicae S. Petri."
- ANTONIO D'ASTI. Rerum Italicarum Scriptores ab Anno Aerae Christianae Quingentesimo ad Millesimum Quingentesimum, Milan, 1723-51, XIV, 1013 ff.
- BADIUS, IODOCUS (Ascensius). Author of commentary upon The Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid in Virgilii Opera, edited by T. Kerver, Paris, 1500.
- BAILLET, ADRIEN. Jugements des Savants sur les Principaux Ouvrages des Auteurs, Paris, 1722.
- L. BAROZZI and R. SABBADINI. Studi sul Panormita e sul Valla, Florence, 1891.
- BAYLE, PIERRE. Dictionnaire Historique et Critique, 2d edition, Rotterdam, 1702.

- BIGNE, DE LA. Maxima Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, Lyons, 1677, Vol. XXVI. Contains Life of Maphaeus Vegius and a number of his works.
- BISTICCI, VESPASIANO DA. Vite di Uomini Illustri del Secolo XIV, edition of A. Bartoli, Florence, 1859.
- BORINSKI, C. "Das Epos der Renaissance." Vierteljahrsschrift für Kultur und Literatur der Renaissance, Vol. I, pp. 187-205, Berlin, 1886.
- BRANDT, SEBASTIAN. P. Virgilii Maronis Opera (Illustrated), Strassburg, 1502.
- BURCHARDT, JACOB. Kultur der Renaissance in Italien, Leipzig, 1908.
- Carmina Illustrum Poetarum Italarum*, Florence, 1719.
- CERDA, JOANNES LUDOVICUS DE LA, S.J.P. Virgilii Maronis Opera. Coloniae Agrippinae, 1628.
- COMPARETTI, DOMINICO. Virgil in the Middle Ages (translated by E. F. M. Ben-ecke), London, 1875.
- CONWAY, R. S. "The Architecture of the Epic," Bulletin of John Rylands Library, Vol. IX, No. 2, 1925.
- COPINGER, W. A. "Incunabula Virgiliana," in Transactions of the Bibliographical Society, Vol. II. London, 1894.
- CORTESIUS, PAULUS. De Hominibus Doctis, Dialogus. Florence, 1734.
- DAVIES, G. S. The Sculptured Tombs of the Fifteenth Century in Rome, London, 1910.
- DIDOT, A. FIRMIN. Alde Manuce et L'Hellénisme à Venise, Paris, 1875.
- DOUGLAS, BISHOP GAVIN. The XIII Bukes of Eneados, London, 1553.
- DU PIN, L. ELLIES. Nouvelle Bibliothèque des Auteurs Ecclésiastiques du 15 siècle, Paris, 1691-1715.
- FABRICIUS, JO. ALBERTUS. Bibliotheca Mediae et Infimae Latinitatis, Florence, 1885.
- FRANZONI, A. L'Opera Pedagogica di Maffeo Vegio, Lodi, 1907.
- GEIGER, LUDWIG. Renaissance und Humanismus in Italien und Deutschland, Berlin, 1882.
- GERINI, G. B. Gli Scrittori Pedagogici Italiani del secolo decimoquinto, Turin, 1896.
- GHILINI, GIROLAMO. Teatro d'Huomini Letterati, Venice, 1647.
- Giornale Storico della Letteratura Italiana*, Ermano Loescher, Turin.
- HARRIS, JAMES RENDELL. The Homeric Centones and the Acts of Pilate, London, 1898.
- HENRY, DR. JAMES. Aeneidea, London and Edinburgh, 1873.
- JOVIUS, P. Elogia Virorum Doctorum, Basle, 1577.
- KERVER, T., editor. See Virgilii Opera.
- KREBS, J. PH. and SCHMALZ, J. H. Antibarbarus der Lateinischen Sprache, Basle, 1905.
- LEMAIRE, P. Bibliotheca Classica Latina, P. Vergilius Maro, edition of N. E. Lemaire, based upon that of Chr. Gottl. Heyne, Paris, 1820.
- LIVERANI, A. Il XIII libro dell' Eneide di M. Vegio illustrato da A. Liverani, Livorno, 1897.

- MANCINI, GIROLAMO. Vita di Lorenzo Valla, Florence, 1891.
- MEHUS, L. Ambrosii Traverasari . . . Latinae Epistolae, Florence, 1759.
- MERLINI, DOMINICO. Saggio di Ricerche sulla Satira contro il Villano, Turin, 1894.
- MINOIA, MARIO. La Vita di Maffeo Vegio, Umanista Lodigiano, Lodi, Tipografia Editrice Quirico e Camagni, 1896.
- MONNIER, P. Le Quattrocento, Paris, 1908.
- MURATORI, L. A. Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, 1738.
- MUSTARD, W. P. Eclogues of Andrelinus, Baltimore, 1918.
- . Eclogues of Mantuan, Baltimore, 1911.
- . The Piscatory Eclogues of Sannazaro, Baltimore, 1914.
- NAUDÉ ET PATIN. Naudaeana et Patiniana, ou singularitez remarquables prises des conversations de Mess. Naudé et Patin [augmentées d'additions au Naudaeana qui ne sont pas dans l'édition de Paris], Amsterdam, 1703.
- NICÉRON, J. P. Mémoires pour Servir à l'Histoire des Hommes Illustres, Paris, 1734.
- NISIELY, UDENO. Proginnasmi Poetici, Florence, 1620.
- PALMER, H. "Handlist of English Editions and Translations of Greek and Latin Classics before 1641," Bibliographical Society Publications, No. 12, London, 1911.
- PANCILORUS HIPPOLITUS. Thesauri Absconditi Urbis Romae, Rome, 1600.
- PASTOR, L. The History of the Popes (translated by F. I. Antrobus), London, 1899.
- PATER, WALTER. The Renaissance, London, 1900.
- PHAER, T., and TWYNE, T. The Whole XIII Bookes of "Aeneidos" of Virgil, London, 1584.
- PICCOLOMINI, AENEAS SYLVIVS. Aeneae Sylvii Piccolomini, Senensis qui post Adeptum Pontificatum Pius eius Nominis Secundus Appellatus est, Opera quae Extant Omnia, Basle, 1571.
- . Aeneae Sylvii Piccolomini, Senensis qui Postea fuit Pius II Pont. Max. Opera Inedita Descripsit ex Codicibus Chisianis Vulgavit Notisque Illustravit Joseph Cugnoni. (Published in Vol. VIII of the Atti della R. Accademia dei Lincei, anno 280, 1882-1883, 3d series, Rome, 1883.)
- QUADRIO, SEVERIO. Della Storia e della Ragione d'ogni Poesia, Bologna, 1739.
- Raffaele, Luigi, editor. Maffeo Vegio, Elenco delle opere. Scritti inediti, Bologna, 1909.
- REDGRAVE, G. R. "The Illustrated Books of Sebastian Brandt," Bibliographica, Vol. II, London, 1896.
- ROSSI, J. B. DE. Inscriptiones Christianae urbis Romae Septimo Saeculo Anteriores, Rome, 1888.
- SANDYS, J. E. A History of Classical Scholarship, Cambridge University Press, 1908.
- . Harvard Lectures on the Revival of Learning, Cambridge University Press, 1905.
- SAINTSBURY, GEORGE. A History of Criticism and Literary Taste in Europe, New York, 1902.

- SAXIUS, JOSEPH ANTONIUS. Historia Literaria Typographica Mediolanensis, Milan, 1745.
- SCALIGER, JULIUS CAESAR. Poetices Libri Septem, 2d edition, Heidelberg, 1581.
- TIRABOSCHI, G. Storia della Letteratura Italiana, Milan, 1823.
- Vegius, Maphaeus. Opera, Lodi, 1613.
- Vierteljahrsschrift für Kultur und Litteratur der Renaissance*, Berlin, 1886.
- Virgilii Opera. P. Virgilii Maronis Buccolica et Georgica et Aeneis*
Cum Familiarissima Iodoci Badii Ascensii Elucidatione. Accessit ad hoc Mapphei Vegii Liber Addititius cum Ascensianis Adnotatiunculis, Paris, 1500.
- VOIGT, GEORGE. Aeneas Silvius de' Piccolomini als Pabst Pius der Zweite, und sein Zeitalter, Berlin, 1858.
- . Die Wiederbelebung des classischen Alterthums, oder erste Jahrhundert des Humanismus, Berlin, 1893.
- WADDING, L. Annales Minorum, Rome, Ancona, Naples, 1731–1860.

COMMENTARY

NOTES TO THE LATIN TEXT
PARALLEL PASSAGES

COMMENTARY

NOTES

[The references are to the line numbers in the original Latin text.]

2. sub is used here to obviate elision. It appears in lines 33 and 102 for the same reason. In lines 377 and 578 no metrical necessity dictates its use. Compare Aeneid xii. 410, duro sub Marte. A curious parallel to Vegius' use of sub occurs in the motto of the state of Massachusetts written by Algernon Sidney (1622-1683), ense petit placidam sub libertate quietam.

5. revomentes, revomentem is employed in its literal significance in Aeneid v. 182. Its figurative use is late, and with corde bad. Compare Florus ii. 10, 3, cum sanguine et spiritu male partam revomuere victoriam. Compare also Ambrosius, Hexaëmeron 4, n. 15, malitiae venena revomere. J. C. Scaliger in Poetices Libri Septem, p. 785, quotes the first six lines of Vegius' Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid and comments: "in quibus Virgilianae lucis vestigia invenias. Tolle enim vocem illam revomentes, caetera omnia optimi poetae opinione digna sunt. Nec minoris aut operae aut gratiae sexdecim proximi versus qui sequuntur, in quibus duae illae comparationes longae optinae; neque eis inferiores quae in Lucani atque Statii libris positae sunt: ac fortasse etiam meliores."

11. Nec frenum, nec colla pati captiva recusant, as the line stands colla pati may possibly be parallel with such a phrase as collum date, 'to submit,' 'to acknowledge defeat,' compare Propertius ii. 10, 15, India quin, Auguste, tuo dat colla triumpho. In medieval Latin, however, collum is sometimes used in the sense of 'a burden' or 'load,' see Du Cange, Glossarium II, 439: "collum, fascis, onus quod ad collum portatur. Covent. Saonae, Anno 1526, 'Pro qualibet sarcina et unoquoque collo seu fascio omnium, denarios sex monetae Saonae'."

62. trucidant is used in classical Latin in the sense 'to slay' as, for example, primosque trucidant immissi Danaï, in Aeneid ii. 494, and xii. 577, primosque trucidant. Horace in Epistles i. 12, 21 makes use of this verb: "seu piscis seu porrum et caepe trucidas." Possibly Vegius mistook Horace (who talked about "slaying" onions, etc., though he really meant 'cutting them up,') and used quite seriously an expression which is intelligible only in a playful context.

71 f. altos . . . ad caelos, compare Georgics iv. 227, caelo alto; Aeneid v. 542; vii. 141; viii. 423; x. 633. Caelum is used only in the singular by Virgil. Vegius here uses the plural, perhaps to avoid elision, perhaps because the plural was more frequently used than the singular in his time. See H. A. J. Monro's note on Lucretius ii. 1097, "caeli for caelum was a Hebraism of Church writers." W. A. Merrill, in a note on the same verse says, "the plural, always masculine, is mainly ecclesiastical and a Hebraism." In line 544 Vegius uses ad caelum.

83. dehinc, a monosyllable by synizesis as always in the Thirteenth Book. Virgil uses dehinc as a monosyllable four times (Aeneid i. 131, 256; vi. 678; ix. 480) and as a dissyllable five times (Georgics iii. 167; Aeneid iii. 464; v. 722; viii. 337; xii. 87). Virgil never begins a line with dehinc. Vegius uses dehinc eleven times in the Thirteenth Book (Virgil uses it nine times in his entire works).

sese *volv*ebat, see Du Cange, Glossarium VI, 877; *volv*ere se for *vert*ere, a Gallicism, compare se tourner. Acta Sanctae Franciscæ Romanæ, Vol. 2, Martii, page 105, Quibus dictis volvit se Regina cæli ad beatam Franciscam. (Saint Francesca Romana was a contemporary of Maphæus Vegius.)

88. Compare Aeneid iii. 658, "Monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum," also Vellus Aureum, I, 140-142: "quis deinde asprum immanemque draconem | tuto adeat, taetrum informem, cui lumina semper | insopita, trucique ardescunt, ignea visu."

91. With this verse compare line 558, which clearly implies that Vegius assumes that the Roman race is to trace its origin to Lavinia. Compare also notes on lines 312 and 370.

109. insiliens, a parallel to this use is found in Vulgaris Interpretatio Regum x. 10, "et insiluit super eum Spiritus Domini."

116. An interesting parallel to this simile is found in The Four Seasons, "Spring" by Anne Bradstreet, quoted by E. W. Martin, The Birds of the Latin Poets, p. 148:

The clocking hen her chirping chickens leads,
With wings and beak defends them from the gleads.

With the simile of a hen and her chickens, compare Matthew 23:37 and Luke 13:34.

134 ff. The dog rent in pieces by the wild boar is Turnus, the other dogs of the pack are the Latins, the huntsman is Latinus. While the simile is picturesque, its vague connection with the context makes it appear rather a patch.

143 ff. J. C. Scaliger, Poetices Libri Septem, p. 786: "Oratio deinde Aeneae frigida, nec multo meliora quæ deinde ponit, nec plenior aut felicior oratio Latini."

185. Compare Vegius' Astyanax, 83, oculos suffundit obortis | siderios lacrimis.

211. Ardea (an interesting article on Ardea appears in Archæologia, XLIX, 169 ff.), compare Aeneid vii. 409-414, especially the lines, locus Ardea quondam | dictus avis, et nunc magnum manet Ardea nomen | sed fortuna fuit. Vegius has in mind also the fall of Ardea as described by Ovid in Metamorphoses xiv. 573 ff. It is of interest that Ardea was captured by Pope Martin V and restored to the Roman Church. The Colonna family, of which the Pope was a member, kept the city under its immediate control. This probably took place at about the time of the composition of the Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid.

221. infixa radice, Fabricius and Lemaire read in fissa radice. The older editions agree in reading infixa. radice, governed by sub, means 'under a root that is held fast in the earth, but for part of its length protrudes above ground.' in fissa radice implies a forked root.

226 ff. Testudo—conamine miscet, compare Seneca, Epistles 121 (Book xx, Epistle 4), 8 and 9: "Animalia quædam tergi durioris inversa tamdiu se torquent, ac pedes exserunt, et obliquant, donec ad locum reponantur. Nullum tormentum sentit supina testudo, inquieta est tamen desiderio naturalis status nec ante desinit (niti), quater se quam in pedes constitit." Badius (quoted by Lemaire) remarks: "Ponit secundam comparisonem, sumptam a testudine, animali quidem imbelli, sed pertinaciter parieti domus incensæ adhaerenti; et non nisi cum summa indignatione eam relinquenti, quomodo et cives ex incendio, res suas tantisper dum possunt recipiunt: nec deserunt nisi vi summa repulsi, ingruente scilicet igne. Potest autem prior comparatio (simile of the ants) referri ad strenue migrantes; posterior ad tarde discedentes."

229. insudans refers to the effect of heat upon the tortoise shell and supplies the immediate reason for conamina miscet, which suggests the turtle's frantic efforts. The figure seems to describe the Rutili, who are so paralyzed by the disaster that they make all sorts of futile efforts before they at last succeed in escaping from the flames.

238. circumlabitur, a verb of which only the present participle is used in classical Latin (Forcellini), compare Lucan vi. 484, prospectumque dedit circumlabentis Olympi. Circumvolo is the usual word. Compare also Lactantius, Fabula 14: "Turno ab Aenea interempto Ardea urbs, regnum Turni, incendio in cinerem redacta, ex quo volucris emersa est, quae patrio eius nomine vocaretur a posteris Ardea." The bird "Ardea" is mentioned by Virgil, Georgics i. 364; Lucan v. 554; Anthologia Latina 772, 37; Isidorus, Origines XII, 7, 21 (E. W. Martin, The Birds of the Latin Poets).

effusis . . . circumlabitur alis, 'it circles on poised wings,' an unusual and late use of effundo, due possibly to some such reminiscence from Virgil as Aeneid v. 818, effundit habenas.

256. Compare Vegius' Astyanax, lines 261 and following.

275 f. altae | sidereus cervicis honos, id est splendor et relucetia, ac nitor cervicis altae, quia ipse altus erat, says Badius. Siderius would have seemed more appropriate as a modifier for oculorum aspectus; compare line 468, sidereos deiecit oculos; also Vegius' Astyanax, line 264, quae tibi sidereos rapuit mors impia vultus. For honos, see line 179.

286. Badius comments: magnus dolor sed ineptus.

312 ff. quando auspiciis, monitisque deorum | Troianam miscere Italo cum sanguine gentem | expediat, . . . intersint, compare Aeneid vii. 271 f., qui sanguine nostrum | nomen in astra ferant also Aeneid xii. 838, hinc genus Ausonio mixtum quod sanguine surget. 'He bids them be present and in calmness of mind discover when it is meet in accordance with the omens and signs of the gods to unite the Trojan race with the folk of Italy.' Compare notes on lines 91 and 370.

326. Compare Vegius' Vellus Aureum, lines 35-37.

346. f. ambas | iungebat palmas, i.e. in supplication, Badius amplifies the phrase thus: coniunctis manibus orabat et rogabat. This is a medieval touch; the Virgilian expression might have been genua amplexens or complexa pedes. Hand-clasping was thought dangerous by the Romans. If the palms were held, pectinatim inter se implexis, bad luck was considered inevitable. Such postures were "a let and hindrance to business of every sort, and at a council of war or a meeting of magistrates, at prayers and sacrifices, no man was suffered to cross his legs or clasp his hands" (Frazer, "The Golden Bough," "The Taboo and the Perils of the Soul," p. 298, and note 4). See also Pliny, Naturalis Historia xxviii. 17; Hippocrates, De Morbo, Vol. I, p. 589, ed. Kuhn, Leipzig, 1825. An interesting passage on hand-clapping occurs in Vegius' Astyanax, lines 14 f., tendebat utrasque | iungebatque manus.

365. unanimis, post-classical. Claudianus, In consulatum Olybrii et Probini, 231: unanimis fratres cinctos stipante senatur.

370. qui, Badius comments: id est, utpote is qui et mittat nepotes: in secula, id est in perpetuam successionem, scilicet Troianos; admixtos generi, id est progenei: Italo, hoc est sanguini Italico, ex parte materna. The order is unusual, the meaning seems to be, 'now let aged father Latinus who has but this one treasure of his old age give you his daughter in marriage and send down to future ages Trojan descendants sprung from the Italian race.' Compare lines 91 and 312.

394. pietatis opus, Forcellini explains, opus dicitur sensu morali quaecumque actio sive bona, sive mala, quocumque modo fuerit patrata. Compare Vulgaris Interpretatio Jacobus ii. 25, fides sine operibus mortua est, and Forcellini's comment, pietas, item clementia, mitis animus, et facile miserans et parcens. Compare also Acta Sanctorum Saturnini, Dativi et aliorum plurimorum martyrorum in Africa, (7): "Subveni, rogo, Christe, habe pietatem, serva animam meam."

401. enudant, enudo in the sense of 'to despoil' is late, compare Cassiodorus, Variarum Libri xii, 10. 13, ut nec Roma suis civibus enudetur, Forcellini.

411. mixtim, compare Lucretius iii. 566, per venas et viscera mixtim. Merrill comments: "The word is comparatively frequent in late Latin." Du Cange, Glossarium IV, 451, "mixtim pro mistim. Vetus ceremoniale MS B. M. Deauratae Tolos, 'Et post omnes similiter tendunt ad mensam tam monachi quam seculares; sed qui sunt honorabiliores debent esse primi mixtim cum monachis'."

415. laeta fronte Latinus, Badius feelingly explains, potius fronte, quam animo dixit: quia licet propter Amatae suspendium doleret, tamen 'premit altum corde dolorem'.

417 f. postquam venientem vidit haud vera illusit imago, compare Aeneid x. 456, haud alia est Turni venientis imago. haud is here used with illusit by analogy to its use with such verbs as errare and ignorare. Krebs and Schmalz, Antibarbarus, Vol. I, p. 646.

Imago, compare Vegius' Astyanax, lines 286 f., simillima imago | patris erat.

438. Compare Vegius' Astyanax, line 97.

448 ff. Compare Astyanax, line 69.

454. ceu quando agrestes, J. C. Scaliger, Poetices Libri Septem, p. 786: "Illa vero comparatio valde bona est."

470. Compare Vegius' Vellus Aureum, line 72.

472. qui haud, a harsh elision unusual in the thesis of the first foot.

479. Andromachae quondam data munera. See Aeneid iii. 483.

480. intextas auro. Compare Aeneid i. 647 f., munera . . . | ferre iubet, palam signis auroque rigentem.

490. tarda, 'late,' not 'slow.' tarda tempora; Du Cange, Glossarium VI, 508, "Serotinus tarda hora a Gallico tard, ad vesperum."

526. Vegius credits Dardanus, the mythical founder of Troy, with the original introduction of the symbol which became the Roman eagle. For the eagle as a military standard see Ovid, Ex Ponto ii. 8, l. 70; Ovid, Fasti v. 586; Silius Italicus vi. 25 ff. (E. W. Martin, The Birds of the Latin Poets, p. 38): Badius enlarges on the subject and concludes: "Hanc autem Romani pro insigni habebant, quia per auspiciu aquilarum inditum est a Romulo urbi nomen." This seems to have been a current misconception. Contrast Livy vii. 1: "Priori Remo augurium venisse fertur sex vultures, iamque nuntiatio augurio cum duplex numerus Romulo sese ostendisset."

535. variantque pedes, Badius explains, scilicet saltando, ad modulos psallentium, unde ductitantium choreas gestum exprimit, Lemaire cites Aeneid vi. 644: pars pedibus plaudunt choreas, but one is tempted to think that medieval custom has colored the description.

raptimque feruntur further suggests dancing in the modern sense.

541. In the Virgilian portent in Aeneid ii. 683 ff. the flame is described as a point of light; in Aeneid vii. 73 ff., the phrase totis Vulcanum spargere tectis, gives an impression of more fire, Vegius increases it still further to flaminam | ingentem . . . nubibus altis | miscentem.

levem, compare Aeneid ii. 682, levis . . . lumen apex.

560. Lavinia's son is described in the prophecy, Aeneid vi. 760 ff.

563 f. quos gloria summo | Oceanum transgressa ingens aequabit Olympo; contrast Aeneid i. 287, imperium Oceano . . . qui terminet. Thomas Twyne, London, 1583, remarks with confidence: "He alludeth to the Romaines conquest of Britain."

583. Compare Vegius' Vellus Aureum, II, 251.

593. medio . . . Olympo, Badius has the following curious note: "non incongrue autem datur illi in caelo, locus medius, quia sidus Veneris est proximum sub sole, qui medius planetarum est."

595. omnipotens genitor, compare the beginning of Aeneas' prayer, Aeneid x. 668, and Venus' prayer Aeneid i. 229 ff. Vegius imitates the same passages in Astyanax, 82 ff.

602 ff. The concluding lines of the poem are based on Ovid's Metamorphoses, xiv. 581-608.

612. Compare Vegius' Astyanax, line 79.

616. An interesting parallel to these lines occurs in Vegius' Astyanax, 113 ff.

"non tamen Iliacas omnino extinguere vires
Decretum est, tuus Aeneas servabitur, unde
Magni opibusque, animisque duces nascentur, et armis
Qui tandem domitas cogent parere Mycenae;
Quorum ingens toti nomen dominabitur orbi,
Illum ego, post multos pelagi, terraeque labores,
Sublimen ad coelum mittam, et divum numero addam."

624. Compare Livy i. 2 (end): "Situs est, quemcumque eum dici ius fasque est super Numicium flumen: Iovem indigetem appellant."

626. J. C. Scaliger (Poetices Libri Septem, p. 787), "nuptiae vero, et convivium non sine ineptiis, neque caetera meliora ad finem usque; qui sane non est ignobilis."

PARALLEL PASSAGES: QUOTATIONS, ADAPTATIONS, REMINISCENCES OF VIRGIL AND OVID IN
"THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF THE AENEID"

1. The same rhythm occurs in Aeneid xii. 1; profudit has the same position in the line as in Aeneid xii. 154.

3. magnanimus . . . Aeneas: Aeneid i. 260; v. 17, 407; ix. 204.

Mavortius: Aeneid vi. 777; ix. 685.

4. obstupere omnes; line 393, stupefacti omnes; line 470, stupefactus; line 543, obstupuit pater Aeneas: compare Georgics iv. 351, omnes obstipere.
gemitumque dedere Latini, compare Aeneid xii. 928, consurgunt gemitu Rutuli.

8. tum tela infigunt terrae, compare Aeneid ix. 746, portaeque infigitur hasta.

10. insanum . . . horrent optati Martis amorem, compare Eclogues x. 44 f., nunc insanus amor duri me Martis in armis | . . . detinet.

12. veniam orare, compare Aeneid xi. 358, veniamque oremus ab ipso.

requiem . . . malorum, compare Aeneid iii. 393, requies ea certa laborum.

20 f. incluta . . . arma, compare Aeneid vi. 479, inclutus armis.

21 f. foedusque precari | pacis, compare Aeneid xi. 356, pacem hanc aeterno foedere firmes, and Aeneid xi. 362, pacem te poscimus omnes.

23. tunc Turnum super adsistens, compare Aeneid x. 490, quem Turnus super adsistens.

placido ore profatur: compare Aeneid i. 521, placido sic pectore coepit; Aeneid vii. 194, placido prior edidit ore; also Aeneid xi. 251. Compare line 423, and line 488.

24. quae tanta animo dementia crevit: compare Aeneid v. 465, infelix, quae tanta animum dementia cepit?; compare Eclogues ii. 69, quae te dementia cepit. With this address to the dead compare Aeneas' words to Lausus, Aeneid x. 825 ff.

25. superum monitis: compare Aeneid iii. 715, me digressum vestris deus appulit oris; and Aeneid iv. 361, Italiam non sponte sequor; Aeneid vii. 239; and elsewhere. Compare lines 162 f., 426, 545.

26. Daunia proles, compare Aeneid xii. 723, Daunius heros.

27. pactis . . . tectis, compare Aeneid x. 649, thalamos . . . pactos.

28. disce Iovem revereri et iussa facessere divum, compare Aeneid vi. 620, discite iustitiam moniti et non temnere divos.

iussa facessere: compare Aeneid iv. 295, iussa facessunt; also Georgics iv. 548, praecepta facessit; and Aeneid ix. 45, praecepta facessunt.

29. memoresque malorum, compare Aeneid i. 543, deos memores fandi atque nefandi.

33. suprema dies: compare Aeneid vi. 502, suprema nocte, and 513, supremam noctem.

dies is fem. for the sake of the meter as often in Virgil, for example, Aeneid vi. 429, and Aeneid ix. 281.

36. nunc armis laetare tuis, compare Aeneid x. 827, arma, quibus laetatus, habe tua.

37. at non tibi erit Lavinia parvo: compare Aeneid xi. 479 f., Lavinia virgo, | causa mali tanti, and Aeneid xii. 937, Tua est Lavinia coniunx. For the use of parvo, see Aeneid x. 494 f., haud illi stabunt Aeneia parvo | hospitia; Aeneid ii. 104, magno mercentur Atridae.

38. nec dextra tamen Aeneae cecidisse pudebit: compare Aeneid x. 829, hoc tamen infelix miseram solabere mortem: | Aeneae magni dextra cadis; also Aeneid xi. 688 f., nomen tamen haud leve patrum | manibus hoc referes, telo cecidisse Camillae.

39. arma virumque: Aeneid i. 1; ix. 777; xi. 747.

40. largior, compare Aeneid x. 493 f., quisquis honos tumuli, quidquid solamen humandi est, | largior.

41 f. ingentia baltei | pondera, compare Aeneid x. 496, immania pondera baltei. Virgil makes the ei of baltei one syllable by synizesis as in Aeneid i. 120, Ilionei. Virgil, Aeneid x. 496, shortens baltei by elision with the following line.

41 ff. Contrast Aeneid x. 500, Quo nunc Turnus ovat spolio gaudetque potitus.

44 f. vos memores tamen, Ausonii, melioribus uti | discite bellorum auspiciis, compare Aeneid xii. 435 f., Disce, puer, virtutem ex me verumque laborem | fortunam ex aliis.

melioribus auspiciis, compare Aeneid iii. 498 f., melioribus, opto, | auspiciis.

45. ego sidera iuro, compare Aeneid vi. 458, per sidera iuro. For iuro with accusative without a preposition, compare Aeneid xii. 197, terram, mare, sidera, iuro.

46. This line is probably a reminiscence of Aeneid vi. 460, nunquam libens echoing the invitus of Virgil.

in proelia movi, Aeneid vii. 603, movent in proelia.

47. vestris actus furiis may suggest Allecto, Aeneid vii. 415 ff.

50. Troia tecta, compare Aeneid vii. 157 ff., Ipse [Aeneas] humili designat moenia fossa | moliturque locum, primasque in litore sedes | castrorum in morem pinnis atque aggere cingit.

52 f. pedum vi | quadrupedes citat: vi metonymy for ictus as in Aeneid iii. 242. For the use of spurs see Aeneid xi. 714, quadripedemque citum ferrata calce fatigat, and Aeneid vi. 881, spumantis equi foderet calcaribus armos.

54. Ignavos, epithet applied by Turnus to the Trojans in Aeneid xii. 12. strepit altus plausibus aether: the same rhythm is found in Aeneid vi. 709, strepit omnis murmure campus.

55-58. et quamvis honores, compare Aeneid xi. 2-5, Aeneas quamquam et sociis dare tempus humandis | praecipitant curae turbataque funere mens est, | vota deum primo victor solvebat Eo.

55. inhumata rogis dare corpora surgat | ingens cura animo, compare Aeneid xi. 22 f., interea socios inhumataque corpora terrae | mandemus

57. sub pectore, compare Aeneid iv. 67, vivit sub pectore vulnus.

volvens, compare Aeneid i. 305, per noctem plurima volvens.

58. meritos superum mandabat honores, compare Aeneid iii. 264, numina magna vocat meritosque indicit honores.

meritos honores: these words occur in Aeneid iii. 118 and 264; v. 652.

59. Compare Aeneid v. 96 ff., and Aeneid xi. 197.
60. in templa: often used in the plural when a single sanctuary is meant, as in Aeneid ix. 626, ad tua templa; and Aeneid vi. 41, Teucros vocat alta in templa sacerdos.
61. For the general idea see Aeneid v. 330.
62. viscera diripiunt: compare Aeneid xii. 214 f., viscera vivis | eripiunt; also Aeneid i. 211, tergora diripiunt costis et viscera nudant.
62. trucidant: see Aeneid ii. 494 and xii. 577.
64. tum vina effundunt pateris, compare Aeneid v. 98, vinaque fundebat pateris.
dona Lyaei, see Aeneid i. 686, laticemque Lyaeum.
65. accumulant, compare Aeneid vi. 885, accumulem donis.
66. tura ignes adolent: compare Aeneid i. 417, tura calent arae; Georgics iv. 379, adolescunt ignibus arae; Aeneid i. 704, flammis adolere penatis; Eclogues viii. 65, adole . . . tura.
altaria fumant, compare Eclogues i. 43, bis senos cui nostra dies altaria fumant.
67. tum plausus per tecta movent, compare Aeneid v. 148, tum plausu fremittuque virum . . . consonat omne nemus.
68. Saturnia Iuno: Aeneid v. 606; ix. 2, 745, 802; x. 760; xii. 156.
69. iam placidam, compare Aeneid xii. 841.
meliores is a reminiscence of the phrase in melius of Aeneid i. 281.
71. in medium effertur, compare Aeneid v. 401, in medium.
73. duplices mittebat ad aethera palmas: compare Aeneid i. 93, duplices tendens ad sidera palmas; Aeneid ix. 16, duplicisque ad sidera palmas sustulit; compare lines 543 f.
74. complexus Iulum, compare Aeneid xii. 433, Ascanium . . . complectitur.
75. Compare Anchises' speech to Aeneas, Aeneid v. 724 ff., and Venus' speech to Cupid, Aeneid i. 664.
spes una, compare Aeneid xii. 57, spes tu nunc una, senectae.
76. quem variis actus fatis discrimina duxi, compare Aeneid i. 204, per varios casus, per tot discrimina rerum.
77. ecce inventa quies, compare Aeneid iii. 495, vobis parta quies. Contrast this line with Aeneid iv. 169, ille dies primus leti primusque malorum.
78. modum, compare Aeneid iv. 98, sed quis erit modus?
79. dura in bella, compare Aeneid x. 146, duri certamina belli.
80. dis auspicibus, compare Aeneid iv. 45, dis equidem auspicibus.
- 81 f. cum primum Aurora rubebit | crastina, compare Aeneid xii. 76 f., cum primum crastina caelo | puniceis invecta rotis Aurora rubebit.
- 83 f. alto | pectore verba trahens, compare Aeneid i. 371, imoque trahens a pectore vocem.
- blando sic ore locutus*, compare Aeneid i. 670 f., blandis . . . | vocibus.
85. O socii, compare the well-known speech of Aeneas, Aeneid i. 198 ff.
86. bellorum aestus: compare Aeneid iv. 564, irarum . . . aestus, and Aeneid viii. 19, curarum . . . aestu.

87. hiemes, 'storms': Aeneid i. 120–122, navem vicit hiems; Aeneid i. 125, emissamque hiemem; Aeneid ii. 110 f., aspera ponti | interclusit hiems; Aeneid iii. 194–195, imber | noctem hiememque ferens.

quicquid acerbum, compare Aeneid xii. 678, quidquid acerbi est.

88. Compare Aeneid iii. 658, monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum.

89 f. convertite mentem | in melius: compare Aeneid i. 281, consilia in melius referet; see note on 85 above.

iam finis adest, compare Aeneid i. 223, et iam finis erat.

90. meta malorum, compare Aeneid iii. 714, haec meta viarum.

96. vosmet, compare Aeneid i. 207, durate, et vosmet rebus servate secundis.

99. discite me, compare Aeneid xii. 435, disce, puer, virtutem ex me.

102. idem ego sub maiora potens vos praemia ducam, compare Aeneid xii. 436 f., nunc te mea dextera bello | defensum dabit et magna inter praemia ducet. idem ego, Aeneid x. 851, idem ego.

103 f. talibus orabat: Aeneid iv. 437; vi. 124; x. 96.

variosque in pectore casus | praeteritos volvens, compare line 57 and note, also line 306.

varios casus: Aeneid i. 204, per varios casus; Aeneid x. 352, per varios sternit casus.

104. partam quietem: compare Aeneid iii. 495, vobis parta quies; Aeneid vii. 598, nam mihi parta quies.

106 f. gravibus tandem evasisse periclis | exsultans, compare Aeneid iii. 282, iuvat evasisse tot urbes.

109. stragemque minatur, compare Aeneid xi. 348, mortemque minetur.

112. conatibus, compare Aeneid xii. 910, in mediis conatibus aegri | succidimus.

117 f. Anchisa genitus: compare Aeneid v. 244, satus Anchisa; also Aeneid v. 424; vi. 331; vii. 152; in Aeneid vi. 322, the phrase Anchisa generate occurs.

mulcebat | dictis: compare Aeneid i. 197, [Aeneas] dictis mae- rentia pectora mulcet; Aeneid v. 464, mulcens dictis; Aeneid v. 770, quos bonus Aeneas dictis solatur amicis.

118. antiquum timorem: compare Aeneid vii. 365, cura antiqua; and Aeneid v. 608, antiquum dolorem.

119. agitans, compare Aeneid ii. 420 f.

121. altior, compare Aeneid viii. 162, cunctis altior ibat Anchises.

122. supereminet omnes: Aeneid i. 501, [Diana] supereminet omnis; Aeneid vi. 856, [Marcellus] supereminet omnes.

129. defessum, compare Aeneid xii. 593, fessis Latinis.

130. crebrescere, compare Aeneid xii. 406 f., horror | crebrescit.

131. confossum, compare Aeneid ix. 444 f., tum super exanimum sese proiecit amicum | confossus.

133. corripuit, 'reprove,' 'check,' compare Ovid, Metamorphoses iii. 564 f., turba suorum | corripuiunt dictis.

manibus verbisque silentia ponens, compare Ovid, Metamorphoses i. 205 f., voce manuque | murmura compressit.

134. spumantis apri, compare Aeneid i. 324, aut spumantis apri cursum clamore prementem.

138. pavitat, compare Aeneid xi. 813.

ululatu, compare Aeneid iv. 667, and ix. 477, which end in this cadence after hiatus.

140. ore silet, by analogy to such a phrase as ore locutus compare Georgics iv. 444.

gemitum premit, compare Aeneid x. 464 f., magnumque sub imo | corde premit gemitum.

141. suppressa voce quierunt, compare Aeneid vi. 102, and xi. 300, ora quierunt.

142 f. tunc sic illacrimans, compare Aeneid xi. 29, sic ait inlacrimans.

alto corde Latinus | verba dabat: compare Aeneid i. 371, imo trahens a pectore vocem; and Aeneid xi. 840, deditque has imo pectore voces.

144. alternasque vices miscent: compare Aeneid xi. 426 f., multos alterna revisens | lusit et in solido rursus Fortuna locavit; and Aeneid ix. 164, discurrunt variantque vices.

146. dominandi innata cupido, compare Georgics iv. 177, innatus . . . amor habendi.

147. mortales quo caeca vehis: compare Aeneid iii. 56 f., quid non mortalia pectora cogis | auri sacra fames; Aeneid iv. 412, improbe Amor, quid non mortalia pectora cogis.

152 f. tristia . . . munera, contrast tristia dona, Aeneid iii. 301.

159. Aeneadas turbasse in bella coactos, compare Aeneid xii. 580 f., Aeneas testatur deos iterum se ad proelia cogi.

160 f. promissa quietis | pignora, compare Aeneid xi. 362, pacem te poscimus omnes, | Turne, simul pacis solum inviolabile pignus.

163. nostris pellere tectis, compare Aeneid iii. 167, hae nobis propriae sedes.

164. nataeque abrumpere foedus, compare Aeneid xii. 31 (Latinus to Turnus), promissam eripui genero, arma impia sumpsi. See Aeneid vii. 268 ff., est mihi nata | opto, in which Latinus offers the hand of Lavinia to Aeneas.

165. For Aeneas' peaceful intent at the time of his arrival in Italy, see Aeneid vii, 155, pacemque exposcere Teucris; see also Aeneid xi. 96, nos alias hinc ad lacrimas eadem horrida belli | fata vocant, for his regret at the continuance of the war. For Latinus' own aversion to the war, see Aeneid xii. 31, arma impia sumpsi.

166 f. quae tanta insania mentem | implicuit; compare Aeneid xii. 37, quae mentem insania mutat; also Aeneid iv. 595, in which the same phrase occurs.

168. sublimemque in equo, compare Aeneid vii. 285, Latini | sublimes in equis.

radiantibus armis, compare Aeneid viii. 616, arma radiantia.

172. magnique albentes ossibus agri, compare Aeneid xii. 36, campique ingentes ossibus albent.

174. fluviique humana caede rubentes: compare Aeneid xii. 35, Tiberina fluenta | sanguine; compare also the prophecy in Aeneid vi. 87, Thybrim multo spumantem sanguine.

185. lacrimisque genas implevit obortis: compare Aeneid vi. 686, effusaeque genis lacrimae; Aeneid iv.30, sinum lacrimis implevit obortis; Aeneid vi.867, and Aeneid xi.41, lacrimis . . . obortis.

186 ff. This passage is based upon Aeneid xi.59 ff.

sese . . . volvens, miserabile corpus | attolli, compare Aeneid xi.59, tolli miserabile corpus | imperat.

187 f. Fulfillment of Turnus' dying request to Aeneas, Aeneid xii.934 f., Dauni miserere senectae | et me, seu corpus spoliatum lumine mavis, redde meis.

190. feretro: compare Aeneid xi.64, and Aeneid vi.222, ingenti . . . feretro.

191. Compare Aeneid xi.78 f., multaque praeterea Laurentis praemia pugnae | aggerat et longo praedam iubet ordine duci.

194 f. equum . . . | rorantem, compare Aeneid xi.88 f., bellator equus . . . | it lacrimans.

197. versa arma gerunt, Aeneid xi.93, versis Arcades armis.

tum extera pubes, compare Aeneid iv.350, nos fas extera quaerere regna.

200 f. caedentes sese, compare Aeneid xi.86, pectora nunc foedans pugnis, nunc unguibus ora. Compare line 217, pectora caedentes.

in tecta, compare Aeneid vii.170 ff.

gressum . . . in tecta Latinus | flexerat, compare Aeneid xi.99, gressumque in castra ferebat.

205. superbam | . . . animam: compare Aeneid vi.817, animamque superbam; Aeneid xi.715, animis . . . superbis.

206 f. largis . . . | . . . lacrimis: compare Aeneid ii.271, largos . . . fletus; Aeneid vi.699, largo fletu; compare line 181.

212 f. favillae | altivolae: Aeneid ix.76, fert . . . | commixtam Volcanus ad astra favillam; Aeneid iii.573, candente favilla; Ovid, Metamorphoses, xiv.575, tepida latuerunt tecta favilla.

213. nec spes plus ulla salutis, compare Aeneid ii.803, nec spes opis ulla dabatur.

215. signum, 'omen,' 'sign': compare Aeneid iii.388, signa tibi dicam; Aeneid ii.171, nec dubiis ea signa dedit Tritonia monstros.

216 f. extemplo concussi animos, turbataque cives | pectora caedentes, compare Aeneid xi.451, extemplo turbati animi concussaue vulgi | pectora.

217 f. miserandae sortis iniquum | deflebant casum, compare Aeneid xii.243, Turni sortem miserantur iniquam.

218. longoque ex ordine: compare Aeneid i.395; vi.482; xi.79; viii.722; xi.143 f., longo ordine.

219. totis . . . viribus, compare Aeneid xii.528, totis in vulnera viribus itur.

220. Compare Virgil's two insect similes, that of the bees, Aeneid i.430-436 (also Georgics iv.162), and that of the ants, Aeneid iv.401-407.

nigra cohors, compare Aeneid iv.404, nigrum . . . agmen.

222. instantes operi: compare Aeneid i.423, instant ardentis Tyrii; and Aeneid i.436, fervet opus.

222 ff. securis | . . . saeva, compare Aeneid vi.819, saevaeque securis.

incumbat, see line 108.

verso . . ., 'destroy,' compare Ovid, Heroides i.24, versa est in cineres . . . Troia.

- parvas | casas, compare Eclogues ii. 29, humilis casas.
- 232 f. senio confectus, compare Aeneid xi. 85, aevo confectus.
- voces | querulas, compare Culex 151, querulae voces.
- 234–238. tum vero circumlabitur alis, compare Ovid, Metamorphoses, xiv. 573 ff., cadit Ardea, Turno | sospite dicta potens, quam postquam Dardanus ignis | abstulit, et tepida latuerunt tecta favilla, | congerie e media, tum primum cognita, praepes | subvolat et cineres plausis everberat alis.
236. indicium nomenque urbis versae Ardea servans, compare Aeneid vii. 411 ff., locus Ardea quondam | dictus avis, et nunc magnum manet Ardea nomen, | sed fortuna fuit.
- 243 f. volitans | fama ruit: compare Aeneid vii. 104 f., circum late volitans iam Fama per urbes | Ausonias tulerat; Aeneid ix. 473 f., interea pavidam volitans pennata per urbem | nuntia Fama ruit; also Aeneid xi. 139 ff., iam Fama volans, tanti praenuntia luctus, | Euandrum, Euandrique domos et moenia replet, | quae modo victorem Latio Pallanta ferebat.
246. letali vulnere, compare Aeneid ix. 579 f., abditaque intus | spiramenta animae letali vulnere rupit.
- 247–249. mox turbati omnes nigras duxere frequentes | incensas ex more faces: ardentibus agri | collucent flammis, compare Aeneid xi. 142 ff., de more vetusto | funereas, rapere faces; lucet via longo | ordine flammarum et late discriminat agros.
249. dehinc se venientibus addunt, compare Aeneid xi. 145 f., contra turba Phrygum veniens plangentia iungit | agmina.
250. quos postquam toto videre ex agmine matres, compare Aeneid xi. 146 f., quae postquam matres succedere tectis | viderunt, maestam incendunt clamoribus urbem.
254. furibundus, 'frenzied with grief,' compare Aeneid iv. 646, [Dido] conscendit furibunda gradus.
255. Turnumque super prostratus et haerens, compare Aeneid xi. 149 f., feretro Pallante reposto | procubuit super atque haeret lacrimansque gemensque.
256. edidit ore, compare Aeneid vii. 194, placido prior edidit ore.
- 258 f. quo me tantis iactate periclis | duxisti, compare Aeneid ix. 490.
259. Compare Aeneid viii. 482, saevis tenuit Mezentius armis, and Aeneid xii. 890, saevis certandum est comminus armis.
260. praestans animi, Aeneid xii. 19, O praestans animi iuvenis.
- 261 ff. hic clarae virtutis | nate, refers?: compare Aeneid xi. 54 f., hi nostri reditus expectatique triumphi? | haec mea magna fides.
- 263 f. Haec illa quies promissa parenti | afflicto toties, compare Aeneid xi. 152, non haec, O Palla, dederas promissa parenti.
266. quanto voluntur fata tumultu, compare Aeneid i. 22, sic volvere parcas.
270. nunc, mi Turne, iaces, compare lines 36 f., heu, nobile corpus, | Turne, iaces.
- 271 f. quo pulchrior alter | non fuit in tota Ausonia, compare Aeneid vii. 54 f., multi illam magno e Latio totaque petebant | Ausonia; petit ante alios pulcherrimus omnis | Turnus. Compare also Aeneid vii. 649 f., quo pulchrior alter | non fuit excepto Laurentis corpore Turni.

273. eloquio, compare Aeneid xi. 383, proinde tona eloquio.
nec quis positus ingentior armis, Aeneid xi. 641, ingentem corpore et armis | The adjective ingens is applied to Turnus in Aeneid xii. 927.
- 274 f. serenus | ille decor, compare Aeneid ii. 285 f., serenos | vultus.
- 277 f. tali rediture paratu | discedens voluisti avidis te credere bellis: compare Aeneid xi. 45 f., non haec Euandro de te promissa parenti | discedens dederam; compare also Aeneid xi. 152, non haec, O Palla, dederas promissa parenti.
278. voluisti avidis te credere bellis, compare Aeneid xi. 153, saevo velles te credere Marti.
279. heu mortem invisam, contrast Aeneid xi. 177, vitam invisam.
284. obscuram, compare Aeneid vi. 268, ibant obscuri.
- 290 f. natum rapuistis, et Ardea flammis | consumpta in cinerem versa est, compare Ovid, Metamorphoses xiv. 573, Turnusque cadit; cadit Ardea.
- 291 f. nunc aethera pennis | verberat, compare Aeneid vii. 411, locus Ardea quondam | dictus avis.
293. sors senectae, compare Aeneid vi. 114, sortem senectae.
296. infrendens, infrendere, 'to gnash,' used only with dentibus by Virgil, Aeneid iii. 664; viii. 230; x. 718.
298. trahens duros gemitus: the parallel phrase trahens vocem occurs in Aeneid i. 371.
- rapidos dolores*: compare Georgics iv. 263, rapidus ignis; Aeneid i. 42, rapidum ignem.
299. validis Iovis unguibus ales: compare Aeneid xii. 247 f., Iovis ales pedibus uncis, and Aeneid xi. 752, aquila unguibus haesit; compare also Aeneid i. 394, Iovis ales; Aeneid ix. 564 f., pedibus Iovis armiger uncis; Aeneid xi. 752, aquila implicuit pedes atque unguibus haesit.
- 302 ff. postera lux latum splendore impleverat orbem: compare Aeneid vii. 148–155, postera cum prima lustrabat lampade terras | orta dies tum satius Anchisa delectos ordine ab omni | centum oratores augusta ad moenia regis | ire iubet, ramis velatos Palladis omnis, | donaque ferre viro, pacemque exposcere Teucris; compare also Aeneid v. 42, postera cum primo stellas Oriente fugarat | clara dies; Aeneid iii. 588, postera iamque dies primo surgebat Eoo; Aeneid xii. 113 f., postera vix summos spargebat lumine montis | orta dies; and Ciris, 349, postera lux ubi laeta diem mortalibus alnum.
- 303 f. tunc pater infractos fatali Marte Latinus | defecisse videns Italos, compare Aeneid xii. 1, Turnus infractos adverso Marte Latinos | defecisse videt.
306. ingentesque animo curas, et foedera volvens: with volvens, compare lines 57, 103, and notes. With the whole line compare Aeneid xii. 190, paribus se legibus ambae | invictae gentes aeterna in foedera mittant (Aeneas' oath to Latinus), also Aeneid xii. 202, nulla dies pacem hanc Italia nec foedera rumpet (Latinus' oath to Aeneas).
- 308 f. praestantes vocat electos ex agmine toto | mille viros, qui Dardanium comitentur ad urbem, compare Aeneid vii. 153, centum oratores augusta ad moenia regis | ire iubet, and Aeneid xi. 331, centum oratores prima de gente Latinos | ire placet.

310. spectatum virtute ducem, compare Aeneid viii.151, rebus spectata iuventus.

togatos, compare Aeneid i.282, gentemque togatam.

312 ff. quando auspiciis, monitisque deorum | Troianam miscere Italo cum sanguine gentem | expediat . . . intersint: compare Aeneid vii.271 f., qui sanguine nostrum | nomen in astra ferant; also Aeneid xii.838, hinc genus Ausonio mixtum quod sanguine surget.

315. Aeneadasque vehant alta intra moenia laeti, compare Aeneid vii.160 f., turris ac tecta Latinorum | ardua cernebant iuvenes muroque subibant.

316 f. interea . . . pacem, Aeneid xii.596 f.

vulgus inerme, Aeneid xii.131, vulgus inermum.

321. alacris, compare Aeneid v.380 f., ergo alacris . . . Aeneae stetit ante pedes.

322. pectore toto, compare Aeneid ix.276 f., iam pectore toto | accipio et comitem casus complector in omnis.

325. Teucrorum castra subibat, contrast Aeneid vii.161, muro . . . subibant.

326. cincta comas ramis oleae, pacemque rogabat: compare Aeneid vii.154 f., ramis velatos Palladis omnis | donaque ferre viro, pacemque exposcere Teucris; also Aeneid xi.100 f., iamque oratores aderant ex urbe Latina | velati ramis oleae veniamque rogantes.

327 f. bonus Aeneas, Aeneid v.770, quos bonus Aeneas dictis solatur amicis, and Aeneid xi.106, quos bonus Aeneas haud aspernanda precantis prosequitur venia.

intra regia duci | tecta iubet, compare Aeneid ii.32, primusque Thymoetes | [equum] duci intra muros hortatur.

regia . . . | tecta, compare Aeneid vii.668, regia tecta subibat.

328. causam . . . viae, compare Aeneid ix.376, quae causa viae?

placido ore, Aeneid vii.194.

329 f. tunc senior sic incipiens ardentia Drances | verba movet, compare Aeneid xi.122f., tum senior semperque odiis et crimine Drances | infensus iuveni Turno.

ardentia, compare Aeneid ii.405, ardentia lumina, often so used by Virgil, who does not, however, apply it to speech.

331. O Troianae dux inclute gentis, compare Aeneid vi.562, dux inclute Teucrum, and Aeneid xi.124 ff., O fama ingens, ingentior armis | vir Troiane, quibus caelo te laudibus aequam? | iustitiaene prius mirer belline laborum? | . . . quaerat sibi foedera Turnus.

336. nec . . . umquam, compare Aeneid iv.338 f., nec coniugis umquam | praetendi taedas; this line has the same cadence as that of Vegius. Compare also Aeneid xii.918, nec . . . usquam.

341. id rabidus Turni, et stimulis incensus iniquis: with rabidus, compare Aeneid xi.336 f., quem gloria Turni | obliqua invidia stimulisque agitabat amaris.

351. spumabat: The figure is that of an angry animal breathing forth fire. Virgil uses it in describing wild boars and horses, but not people. The closest parallel occurs in Aeneid viii.304 f., super omnia Caci | speluncam adiciunt spirantemque ignibus ipsum.

352 f. at vero dignum invenit pro talibus ausis | exitium, compare Aeneid ii. 535–537, pro talibus ausis | di . . . persolvant grates dignas.

353 f. momordit | . . . prostratus humum, compare Aeneid xi. 417 f., qui . . . procubuit moriens et humum semel ore memordit.

358 f. in te omnis domus, et fessi inclinata Latini | spes iacet, compare Aeneid xii. 59, in te omnis domus inclinata recumbit.

359 f. super aurea . . . | sidera: compare Aeneid i. 379, super aethera notus; also Aeneid ii. 488, ferit aurea sidera clamor, and Aeneid xi. 832 f., ferit aurea clamor | sidera.

360. ingentem bello, compare Aeneid xi. 641, ingentem corpore et armis.

caelestibus armis, Aeneid xii. 167, pater Aeneas . . . caelestibus armis.

361. extollunt, compare Aeneid xi. 401 f., extollere viris | gentis bis victae.

362. consultaque turba, compare Georgics iii. 491, consultus . . . vates.

363. invalidique aetate senes: compare Aeneid iv. 599, confectum aetate; and Aeneid xi. 85, aevo confectus; and Aeneid xii. 132, invalidique senes.

laeta iuventus, compare Aeneid ii. 394 f., hoc . . . omnisque iuventus | laeta facit.

367. Ausonia, compare Aeneid vii. 54 f., illam . . . totaque petebant | Ausonia.

368. in te unum conversi oculi, compare Aeneid xii. 656 f., in te ora Latini | in te oculos referunt, and Aeneid xii. 704, et omnes | convertere oculos.

369. For an account of the aged Latinus and his only daughter, see Aeneid vii. 52 f., sola domum et tantas servebat filia sedes, | iam matura viro.

iam senior, compare Aeneid vii. 45 f., rex arva Latinus et urbes | iam senior longa placidas in pace regebat.

371. mittat, compare Aeneid xii. 191 f., paribus se legibus ambae | invictae gentes aeterna in foedera mittant.

372. ergo age, magne veni Teucrorum ductor, compare Aeneid ii. 707, ergo age, care pater.

Teucrorum ductor, Aeneid viii. 470, maxime Teucrorum ductor.

373. ingredi . . . honores, compare Eclogues iv. 48, adgredere . . . honores.

374. cunctique . . . simul ore fremebant, compare Aeneid i. 559, and v. 385, where the same phrase occurs.

375. pius Aeneas: compare line 406, also Aeneid i. 220, 305, 378; iv. 393; v. 26; and elsewhere.

376. amico pectore, compare Aeneid iii. 463, ore . . . amico.

377. placida solitum sub pace, compare Aeneid vii. 46, longa placidas in pace regebat.

378. violentia Turni, compare Aeneid xi. 376, talibus exarsit dictis violentia Turni, and Aeneid xii. 45 f., haudquaquam dictis violentia Turni | flectitur.

379. tanti discrimina Martis: the cadence is the same as that of Aeneid i. 204, per tot discrimina rerum.

380. iuvenilis . . . laudis, compare Aeneid ii. 518, iuvenalibus armis.

381. quicquid id est, Aeneid ii. 49, quidquid id est, timeo Danaos.

382 f. et sanctam aeterno cum foedere pacem | iungere, compare Aeneid xi. 356, et pacem hanc aeterno foedere firmes.

383 f. rex idem imperium, et veneranda tenebit | scepra socer, compare Aeneid xii. 192 f., socer arma Latinus habeto | imperium sollemne socer.

384 f. statuentque mei mihi moenia Teucri, | et nomen natae urbis erit, compare Aeneid xii. 193 f., mihi moenia Teucri | constituent urbiq̄ue dabit Lavinia nomen.

385 f. sociosque penates | adiciam: compare Aeneid xii. 192, sacra deosque dabo; Aeneid xii. 836 f., morem ritusque sacrorum | adiciam.

386. vos communes in saecula leges, compare Aeneid xii. 190 f., paribus se legibus ambae | invictae gentes aeterna in foedera mittant.

387. concordēs . . . amores, compare Aeneid vi. 827, concordēs animae.

388. quod restat adhuc, compare Aeneid ii. 142, quae restet adhuc.

391. clara dies, compare Aeneid v. 42 f., postera cum primo stellas Oriente fugarat | clara dies.

392. dixerat, compare line 374 and note.

affatu: compare Aeneid iv. 283 f., quo nunc reginam ambire furem | audeat adfatu; also Aeneid xi. 120 f., dixerat Aeneas, illi obstipuerē silentes | conversiq̄ue oculos inter se atq̄ue ora tenebant.

393. stupefacti, compare Aeneid vii. 119, stupefactus numine.

394. mox robore toto | congestas statuere pyras: compare Aeneid vi. 214 f., principio pinguem taedis et robore secto | ingentem struxere pyram; also Aeneid xi. 185, iam . . . constituere pyras; and Aeneid xi. 204, innumeras struxere pyras.

395–398. ignemque repostis | civibus immisere: altumque sub aethera fumus | evolat, atq̄ue atris caelum sublime tenebris | conditur: with this passage compare Aeneid xi. 185 ff., huc corpora quisque suorum | more tulere patrum, subiectisque ignibus atris | conditur in tenebras altum caligine caelum.

398–400. innumeras ex omni rure bidentes | glandilegosque sues iugulant, pinguesque iuencos | immittuntque rogis, compare Aeneid xi. 197, multa bouum circa mactantur corpora morti | saetigerosque sues, raptasque ex omnibus agris | in flammam iugulant pecudes.

400. latos . . . campos, Aeneid x. 408, per latos acies Volcania campos.

401. fremit impulsus clamoribus aer, compare Aeneid xi. 192, it caelo clamorque virum clangorque tubarum.

403. tunc Teucri Ausoniq̄ue omnes, mixto agmine, laeti, compare Aeneid v. 293, conveniunt Teucri mixtique Sicani.

404 f. tecta . . . | Laurenti, atq̄ue altis erectam moenibus urbem, compare Aeneid vii. 160 f., pecta Latinorum | ardua cernebant iuvenes muroque subibant. For the description of Latinus' palace see Aeneid vii. 170 ff.

408. animi maturus Aletes, compare Aeneid ix. 246, hic annis gravis atq̄ue animi maturus Aletes.

409. gravis Ilioneus, compare Aeneid ix. 246, annis gravis; in Aeneid i. 521, the phrase maximus Ilioneus occurs.

Mnestheusque, acerque Serestus: compare Aeneid ix. 171, instat Mnestheus acerque Serestus; also Aeneid ix. 779, and Aeneid xii. 547, Mnestheus acerque Serestus.

410. Sergestus . . . fortisque Cloanthus: compare Aeneid i. 510, Sergestumque vidit fortemque Cloanthum; Aeneid iv. 288, Mnesthea Sergestumque vocat fortemque Serestum; Aeneid i. 222, and Aeneid i. 612, fortemque Gyan, fortemque Cloanthum.

412. interea effusi stabant per moenia cives, compare Aeneid xii. 131 ff., tum studio effusae matres et vulgus inermum | invalidique senes turris ac tecta domorum | obsedere, alii portis sublimibus astant.

415. laeta fronte Latinus, compare Aeneid xi. 238, haud laeta fronte.

416. magna . . . comitante caterva. This expression occurs in Aeneid ii. 40; ii. 370; v. 76.

417 f. postquam . . . venientem . . . vidit | . . . haud vera illusit imago, compare Aeneid x. 456, haud alia est Turni venientis imago.

420 f. late regalem oculis spargebat honorem | sidereis, compare Aeneid i. 591, laetos oculis adflarat honores.

421. data copia fandi, compare Aeneid i. 520; and Aeneid xi. 248, coram data copia fandi.

424 f. venisti tandem, compare Aeneid vi. 687, venisti tandem.

cupidum nec fixa fefellit | spes animum, compare Aeneid vi. 691, nec me mea cura fefellit.

425. lux Troianae clarissima gentis, compare Aeneid ii. 281, O lux Dardaniae, spes O fidissima Teucrum.

426. magnum quem iussa deum tot casibus actum, compare Aeneid i. 598 f., terraeque marisque | omnibus exhaustis iam casibus.

434. nunc age occurs in Georgics iv. 149; Aeneid vi. 756; vii. 37.

437. sunt mihi regna, compare Aeneid i. 71, sunt mihi bis septem.

440. quem contra, compare Aeneid ix. 280, contra quem [Ascanium] taila fatur | Euryalus.

bonus Aeneas, Aeneid v. 770.

442. placidae . . . pacis, i.e., 'old age,' compare Aeneid vii. 45 f., rex arva Latinus et urbes | iam senior longa placidas in pace regebat.

443. quaeso, compare Aeneid xii. 72, ne, quaeso, ne me lacrimis . . . prosequere.

444. nunc adsum, compare Aeneid i. 595, coram . . . adsum.

445 f. magni mihi surgit imago | Anchisae, compare Aeneid ii. 560, subiit cari genitoris imago.

447. talibus orabant inter se, et tecta subibant, compare Aeneid viii. 359, talibus inter se dictis ad tecta subibant.

talibus orabant: compare Aeneid iv. 437; vi. 124; x. 96.

448. cum studio effusae matres . . ., compare Aeneid xii. 131, tum studio effusae matres.

matresque nurusque, compare Aeneid xi. 215, matres miseraeque nurus.

449. longaevi . . . patres, compare Aeneid v. 715, longaevosque senes.

450. pulchra . . . corpora, compare Aeneid xii. 270, pulcherrima . . . corpora.

451. ante omnes, compare Aeneid v. 570, formaque ante omnis pulcher Iulus.

magnum Aenean: Aeneid x. 159; ix. 787; x. 830.

445. tenuit . . . imber, Georgics i. 259, frigidus agricolam si quando continet imber.

resolutis, compare Ovid, Metamorphoses xi. 516, ecce cadunt largi resolutis nubibus imbres.

456. curvumque . . . aratrum, compare Georgics i. 508, curvae . . . falces.
463. pulcher Iulus: compare Aeneid v. 570, formaque ante omnis pulcher, Iulus, also Aeneid vii. 107, and 477 f.
464. dehinc Itali, mixtique Phryges, compare Aeneid v. 293, undique conveniunt Teucri mixtique Sicani.
468. sidereos deiecta oculos: compare Aeneid xi. 479 f., iurtaque comes Lavinia virgo | . . . oculos deiecta decoros; compare also Aeneid i. 561, vultum demissa.
470. primo aspectu stupefactus inhaesit, compare Aeneid i. 613 f., obstipuit primo aspectu Sidonia Dido | casu deinde viri tanto.
474. iunguntur foedera, Aeneid xii. 822, foedera iungent, compare Aeneid xi. 355 f., quin natam egregio genero dignisque hymenaeis | des, pater, et pacem hanc aeterno foedere firmes.
475. canunt . . . hymenaeum, compare Aeneid vii. 398, canit hymenaeos.
- 476 f. dehinc plausus fremitusque altum super aera mittunt, | et laetam vocem per regia tecta volutant, compare Aeneid v. 148 ff., tum plausu fremituque virum . . . consonat omne nemus, vocemque inclusa volutant | litora.
478. fidum . . . Achaten: Aeneid i. 188; vi. 158; viii. 521; viii. 586; x. 332. In Aeneid i. 643, Achates is, as here, sent to bring gifts.
- 479 f. Andromachae quondam data munera, see Aeneid iii. 482 ff., nec minus Andromache . . . | fret picturatas auri subtemine vestis | . . . textilibusque onerat donis.
- vestes | intextas auro*, Aeneid i. 648, pallam signis auroque rigentem.
- 480 ff. quod saepe solebat | . . . circumdare collo | auratum, gemmis circumseptumque monile: compare Aeneid i. 653, quod gesserat olim. With collo | . . . monile, compare Aeneid i. 654, colloque monile | bacatus; with circumdare collo, compare Ovid, Metamorphoses i. 631, circumdat vincula collo.
481. dum res Troianae stabant, compare Aeneid ii. 455, dum regna manebant.
- 483 f. magnum cratera in pignus amoris | quem Priamus patri Anchisae donavarat olim: compare Aeneid v. 535–538, ipsius Anchisae longaevi hoc munus habebis, | cratera impressum signis, quem Thracius olim | Anchisae genitori in magno munere Cisseus | ferre sui dederat monumentum et pignus amoris; compare also Aeneid ix. 266, dabo . . . cratera antiquum quem dat Sidonia Dido.
489. variisque trahunt sermonibus horas, compare Aeneid i. 748, et vario noctem sermone trahebat.
- 491 f. regali convivia luxu | effundunt, compare Aeneid i. 637 f., domus interior regali splendida luxu | instruitur.
492. latosque alta intra tecta paratus, compare Aeneid i. 638, mediisque parant convivia tectis.
493. strato discumbere in ostro, compare Aeneid i. 700, stratoque super discumbitur ostro.
- convenere omnes*, Aeneid i. 707 f., frequentes | convenere.
494. dapibus . . . futuris, Aeneid i. 210, dapibusque futuris.
495. dat manibus crystallus aquas, compare Aeneid i. 701, dant manibus famuli lymphas.

496–499. ministri | innumeri magno distinguunt ordine curas. | Pars dapibus reficit mensas, pars pocula miscet, | craterasque replet, compare Aeneid i. 705, centum . . . ministri | qui dapibus mensas onerent et pocula ponant.

499. nunc hac, nunc volvitur illac: compare Aeneid iv. 285; viii. 20, animum nunc huc celerem nunc dividit illuc.

500. turba frequens, compare Aeneid i. 707, per limina laeta frequentes.

varios miscentque per atria motus, compare Aeneid xii. 217, Rutulis . . . vario misceri pectora motu, for a verbal similarity.

501 f. With Latinus' interest in Iulus compare that of Dido, Aeneid i. 712 ff.

immotis spectabat . . . | luminibus, compare Aeneid i. 717 f., oculis . . . | haeret.

504. maturumque animum ante annos, compare Aeneid ix. 311 f., Iulus, | ante annos animumque gerens curamque virilem.

506. complexum manibus iunctumque fovebat, compare Aeneid i. 687, dabit amplexus, and Aeneid i. 718, gremio foveat.

509 f. postquam epulis compressa fames: Aeneid i. 216, postquam exempta fames, and Aeneid viii. 184, et amor compressus edendi.

traducere longam | incipiunt fando . . . noctem, compare Aeneid i. 748, vario noctem sermone trahebat.

511. With the conversation described in this and the following line compare Aeneid i. 750 ff., multa super Priamo rogitans, super Hectore multa; | nunc, quibus Aurorae venisset filius armis, | nunc, quales Diomedis equi, nunc, quantus Achilles.

515. ardens in equo, compare Aeneid xii. 71, ardet in arma.

517 f. magnum heroum Latiiq[ue] antiqua potentis | gesta recensebant: this conversation is based upon that of Aeneas and Evander, Aeneid viii. 314 ff.

518–521. fugientemque horrida nati | arma sui Saturnum . . . | . . . genusque in montibus altis | composuisse vagum, legesque et iura dedisse, compare Aeneid viii. 320 ff., primus ab aethereo venit Saturnus Olympo | arma Iovis fugiens et regnis exsul adeptis. | is genus indocile ac dispersum montibus altis | composuit legesque dedit, Latiumque vocari | maluit, his quoniam latuisset tutus in oris.

519 f. Saturnum Italiam latuisse sub oris: | hinc Latium dixisse, compare Aeneid viii. 357, hanc Saturnus condidit arcem | . . . illi fuerat Saturnia nomen.

520 f. genus . . . composuisse vagum, compare Aeneid vii. 202 ff., Latinos | Saturni gentem haud vinclo nec legibus aequam, | sponte sua veterisque dei se more tenentem.

523 ff. utque Electra Atlantide cretus | Iasio Idaeam caeso Phrygiae isset ad urbes | Dardanus: compare Aeneid iii. 165 ff., nunc fama minores | Italiam dixisse ducis de nomine gentem: | hae nobis propriae sedes; hinc Dardanus ortus | Iasiusque pater; also Aeneid viii. 134–137, Dardanus, Iliacae primus pater urbis et auctor, | Electra, ut Graii perhibent, Atlantide cretus, | advehitur Teucros; Electram maximus Atlas | edidit.

525. ex Corytho, Aeneid iii. 170 f., Corythum terrasque requirat | Ausonias.

527. Hectoreae gentis, compare Aeneid i. 273, gente sub Hectorea.

530 f. tum fremitus, laetaeque per atria voces | alta volant, strepitu ingenti tectum omne repletur, compare Aeneid i. 725 f., fit strepitu tectis vocemque per ampla volutant | atria.

532. dant lucem flammae, et lato splendore coruscant, compare Aeneid i. 727, noctem flammis funalia vincunt.
533. cithara, compare Aeneid i. 740 f., cithara crinitus Iopas | personat.
534. plausum ingeminant, compare Aeneid i. 747, ingeminant plausu Tyrii, Troesque sequuntur.
536. largo luxu, compare Aeneid i. 637, regali luxu.
537. celebrata: for a similar use compare Aeneid v. 603, celebrata . . . certamina.
tum maximus heros, see Aeneid vi. 192, tum maximus heros.
538. Aeneas urbem curvo signabat aratro: compare Aeneid v. 755 f., interea Aeneas urbem designat aratro | sortiturque domos; also Aeneid vii. 157, ipse humili designat moenia fossa.
540. Compare similar prodigies in Aeneid ii. 680 ff., and Aeneid vii. 72 ff.
ecce, compare Aeneid ii. 682 f., ecce levis summo de vertice visus Iuli | fundere lumen apex. The editio princeps misprints fatu for fatum. Compare Aeneid ii. 680, mirabile monstrum; for the idea of ill fortune implied in fatum compare Aeneid vii. 73, visa, nefas, longis comprehendere crinibus ignem.
diffundere flammam, Aeneid ii. 683, fundere lumen; also Aeneid x. 270 f., flamma | funditur.
542. summo vertice, Aeneid ii. 682, summo de vertice.
- 543 f. obstipuit pater Aeneas, compare Aeneid v. 90, obstipuit visu Aeneas.
duplicesque tetendit | ad caelum cum voce manus: compare Aeneid ii. 688, caelo palmas cum voce tetendit; Aeneid iii. 176, tendo supinas | ad caelum cum voce manus; x. 667, duplicis cum voce manus ad sidera tendit.
544. Compare Aeneid ii. 689 f., Iuppiter omnipotens | aspice nos, hoc tantum, et si pietate meremur.
545. terraeque, marique, compare Aeneid i. 598 f., terraeque marisque | omnibus exhaustis casibus.
- 547 f. per si quid agendum est | quod restat, compare Aeneid ii. 142, per, si qua est, quae restet.
548. placidam quietem, Ciris, 343, placidam quietem.
549. augurio, compare Aeneid ii. 691, da deinde augurium.
firmate, compare Aeneid ii. 691, haec omnia firma.
malisque imponite finem, compare Aeneid ii. 619, finemque impone labori.
550. talia iactantem, compare Aeneid ii. 588, talia iactabam; lines 551–555 are imitated from Aeneid ii. 588–594.
aurea mater, compare Aeneid x. 16, Venus aurea.
551. se Venerem confessa, compare Aeneid ii. 591, confessa deam.
552. nate, compare Aeneid ii. 594, and elsewhere.
nate, animo pone hanc curam, compare Georgics iv. 531, nate, licet tristis animo deponere curas.
capesse: for a parallel form see Aeneid i. 77, mihi iussa capessere fas est.
554. nunc tibi parta quies, nunc meta extrema malorum, compare Aeneid vii. 598, nam mihi parta quies.
555. componunt saecula pacem, compare Aeneid vii. 339, compositam pacem.
- 556 f. e vertice, compare Aeneid ii. 682, summo de vertice.

nec . . . horresce, compare Aeneid iii. 394, nec tu mensarum morsus horresce futuros.

558. celebri . . . sanguine, compare Aeneid i. 286, pulchra . . . origine.

559. ad sidera mittat, compare Aeneid i. 259, sublimemque feres ad sidera caeli.

561 f. egregiis totum qui laudibus orbem | complebunt, contrast Aeneid i. 287, imperium Oceano, famam qui terminet astris.

563 f. quos gloria summo | Oceanum transgressa ingens aequabit Olympo, contrast Aeneid i. 287, imperium Oceano . . . qui terminet.

565 f. quos . . . ardens . . . | . . . vehet super aethera virtus, compare Aeneid vi. 129 f., quos . . . ardens evexit ad aethera virtus; Aeneid i. 287 f., quoted in note on 563 f.

super aethera, compare note on line 359.

571 f. sacros Troia ex ardente penates | ereptos: compare Aeneid ii. 293, sacra suosque tibi commendat Troia penates; Aeneid iii. 148 ff., Phrygiæque penates, | quos mecum ab Troia mediisque ex ignibus urbis | extuleram.

573. ad aeternum mansuros tempus honores, compare Culex, 38, gloria . . . mansura per aevum.

575. ad sedes alias, compare Aeneid i. 270 ff., regnumque ab sede Lavini | transferet, et longam multa vi muniet Albam | . . . inde | . . . Romulus excipiet gentem et Mavortia condet | moenia Romanosque suo de nomine dicet.

577 f. pace tenebis | sub placida gentem Iliacam, see Aeneid i. 265 ff., tertia dum Latio regnantem viderit aestas, | ternaque transierint Rutulis hiberna subactis.

579. Elysias . . . ad umbras, compare Georgics i. 38, Elysios . . . campos. Virgil, in Aeneid vi. 744, speaks of amplum . . . Elysium as laeta arva.

580 f. Italis dominabere, leges | communes Teucrisque ferens, compare Aeneid i. 264, moresque viris et moenia ponet. See the response of the oracle of Apollo, Aeneid iii. 97 f., hic domus Aeneae cunctis dominabitur oris.

581 f. tum laetus ad altum | te mittes caelum, compare Jupiter's promise to Venus, Aeneid i. 259 f., feres ad sidera caeli | magnanimum Aenean.

sic stat sententia divum: compare Aeneid i. 257, manent immota tuorum | fata tibi; Aeneid i. 260, neque me sententia vertit.

583. leves . . . ad auras, Ovid, Metamorphoses xiv. 597, perque leves auras.

585. divae . . . parentis, compare Aeneid iv. 365, diva parens.

586. compositos felici in pace, compare Aeneid i. 249, placida compositus pace.

590 f. iam paribus Phryges atque Itali se moribus ultro, | et socia ingenti firmabant pectora amore, compare Aeneid xii. 190 f., paribus se legibus ambae | invictae gentes aeterna in foedera mittant.

593. se immisit: compare seolvebat, line 83 above; compare Aeneid vi. 262, antro se immisit aperto.

596. qui res hominum, compare Aeneid i. 229, qui res hominumque deumque | aeternis regis imperiis.

599. nec . . . te . . . sententia fallit, compare Aeneid i. 260, neque me sententia vertit.

600. tres annos, compare Aeneid i. 265 f., tertia aestas, | ternaque hiberna.
601. nullo discrimine: compare Aeneid i. 574, Tros Tyriusque mihi nullo discrimine agetur; Aeneid x. 108, Tros Rutulusne fuat, nullo discrimine habeo.
- 603 f. meritumque ferebas | illaturum astris, Aeneid i. 259 f., sublimemque feres ad sidera caeli | magnanimum Aenean.
604. illaturum astris, compare Aeneid i. 259, feres ad sidera caeli.
605. Aeneia virtus, Ovid, Metamorphoses xiv. 581, Aeneia virtus.
606. hominum pater atque deum, compare Aeneid i. 254, hominum sator atque deorum.
607. pectore verba ferens, compare Aeneid i. 371, imoque trahens a pectore vocem.
609. et terra et pelago et per tanta pericula vectos, compare Aeneid i. 3, multum ille et terris iactatus et alto.
611. Iunone secunda: compare Aeneid iv. 45, Iunone secunda; see Aeneid i. 279 f., aspera Iuno consilia in melius referet, and Aeneid xii. 841, Iuno mentem retorsit.
617. laude perenni, compare Aeneid ix. 79, fama perennis.
619. super aethera mittam, compare Aeneid i. 379, super aethera notus.
- 620 f. nec regia Iuno | abnuit, compare Aeneid vii. 438 f., nec regia Iuno | immemor est. Compare also Ovid, Metamorphoses xiv. 593 f.
- 621 f. magnum Aenean ad altum | efferri caelum, compare Aeneid i. 259 f., feres ad sidera caeli | magnanimum Aenean.
625. ubi currit in aequora harundine tectus: compare Aeneid viii. 34, [Tiberinum] umbrosa tegebat harundo; compare Ovid, Metamorphoses xiv. 598.
- 626 ff. Compare Ovid, Metamorphoses xiv. 603 ff.
628. super aera, compare line 476, super aera.
- 629 f. quem Iulia proles | indigetem appellat, templisque imponit honores: compare Aeneid xii. 794, indigetem Aenean scis ipsa deberi caelo; and Ovid, Metamorphoses xiv. 606 ff.; also Livy i. 2 (end), Iovem indigetem appellant.

INDEX

INDEX

A

Abbreviator, Vegius as, 10
 Achates, 47
Acta Sanctorum, 146
 "aemulus Numae," 20
 Aeneas: apotheosis of, 26; of Augustan Rome, 24; builds city, 53; death of, 4, 48; in illustrations, 44, 45, 46, 48; in Italy, 53; marriage of, 46, 53; slays Turnus, 53; translation of, 53; victory, 45; of Virgil, 27, 158 f.; wedding feast, frontispiece
 Aeneas of Gaza, 23
 Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini (Pope Pius II), 8, 11, 18, 20, 148, 149
Aeneid: as allegory, v, 2, 24; epitomes for twelve books, 49; incomplete, 31; interpretation, v, 25, 26; Irish, 39; Italian, 39; other supplements to, 1, 2; as a parable, 26; the Pilgrim's Progress of antiquity, 24; sequel to the, v, 37; supplement to, appeared until 1650, v, 30; symbolic expression, 25; The XIII Bookes of Aeneidos, 37, facing 50; see Parallel passages
 Aitken, G. A., 38 n.
 Alberti, Leon Battista, 24
 Aldus, see Manutius
 Alfonso, King of Naples, 19
 Allegory, 25, 26, 29, 30, 32, 38; Aeneid as divine, v, 2
 "alter Augustus," 20
 "alter Maro," 5, 30
 "alter Parthenias," 5
 "ambas jungebat palmas," 72 f. (Il. 346 f.), 155
 Allegorizers, the, 24, 25
 Ambergau, Adam de, v, 29; colophon, 50; facsimile of opening lines of Virgil of 1471, 50
 Ambrose, 13
 Anachronisms, 34; see Description of Brant's woodcuts, 44 ff.
 Anchises, 28, 47
 Angelico, Fra, 12, 13, 17
 Antiquities of Saint Peter's, writings on, 20
 Antwerp, 29
 Appian, Civil Wars, 19
 Apollonius of Tyana, 13
 Archaeology, 14, 15

Ardea, 45; article on, 154; burning of, 4; in illustrations, 45
 Ardea, the "bird," 45, 155
 Aretino, Carlo, 15
 Argument, The (Twyne and Phaer), 53
 Argumentum, 48, 49, 52
 Aristotle, 18
 Arundel Manuscripts, 5, 49
 Ascanius, 46, 47
 Ascensius, Iodocus Badius, commentary by, 1, 32, 33, 146, 154, 155, 156
 Associates of Vegius, 15
Astyanax, 145, 154, 157
 Atticus, 23
 Augustine, Saint, 12
 Aurispa, 17, 30
 Authorship, 11 ff.; see Bibliography, 145 f.

B

"Babylonian Captivity," 5
 Badius, 33; see Ascensius
 Bährens, 49
 Baillet, Adrien, 146
 Barlandus, 33
 Barozzi, L., and Sabbadini, R., 19 n., 146
 Barzizza, Gasparino, 19
 Basil, 13
 Basilica of St. Peter, history of the, 14
 Basle, 19 n., 29, 41, 42, 46
 Bayle, Pierre, 146
 Beccadelli, Antonio, 18, 19
 Bellay, Cardinal du, 38
 Bembo, Cardinal, 29
 Bernard, 13
 Bernardino, Fra, of Siena, 8, 20; canonization of, 8
 Beroaldus, 33
 Bible, 25; editions before 1500, v
Bibliographical Society Publications, 33 n., 38 n., 148
 Bigne, de la, 147
 Biography, 6, 8; of Vegius, see Life and work
 Bisticci, Vespasiano da, 9; biographer, 23, 30, 147
 Blondus, Flavius, 14, 18, 21
 Block prints, 42; see Woodcuts

Boethius, of 1501, 42
 Bologna, 10
 Borinski, C., 147
 Borrichius, Olaus (Borch, Olaf von), 31
 Boswell, James, 39
 Botticelli, 16
 Boulting, William, 20 n.
 Bracciolini, Poggio, 17
 Bradstreet, Anne, 154
 Brant, Sebastian, vi, 1, 40, 44; Columbus' letter, 41; Narrenschiff, 41; Virgil, 40, 41, 43, 147; woodcuts, 30, 40, 41, 42, 46; see Redgrave
 Brescia, 29
 Brisciola, Laelius, 31
 British Museum, vi, 49
 British versions, 36
 Bruni, Leonardo, 10, 21, 22
 Bunyan, John, 24
 Burchardt, Jacob, 147
 Burke, Edmund, 39
 Burlesque, 38
 Burt, T. Seymour, 2, 39, 40
 Butler, 38
 Byzantium, 21

C

Calderinus, 33
 Camaldulites, Order of the, 23
 Canon of the Basilica of St. Peter, Vegius, 11, 29
 Capra, Bartolomeo de la, 17, 18
Carmina Illustrium Poetarum Italorum, 147
 Carthage, 25
 Cassian, 13
 Cato, 23
 Celestial City, 25
 Cerda, Juan Luigi de la, 31, 147
 Charles I, 38
 Christian exegesis, 26
 Christina, Queen, 31
 Chrysostom, 13; Saint, 23
 Cicero, 17, 18; manuscript of works, 17
 Claudian, 18
 Classics, illustrated, 42; see Brant
 Coleman, C. B., 10 n.
 Cologne, 29
 Colophon, 48 f., 50; Adam de Ambergau's, 50; Douglas', 100, 142; Twyne's, 91
 Columbus, caravels of, 41, 42, 43; letter of, 41; typical Renaissance discoverer, 41 f.

Commentary, by Ascensius, 1, 32, 33; by Beroaldus, 33; by Barlandus, 33; by Donatus, 32; by Fabricius, 33; by Landinus, 32; by Mancinellus, 33; by Pomponius Laetus, 33; by Servius, 32; by Vives, 33
 Comparetti, D., 1, 14 n., 25, 147
 Constantine the Great, 20
 Constantinople, 16; fall of, 20
Convivium Deorum, 10 n., 17, 145
 Conway, R. S., 26 n., 147
 Copinger, W. A., vi, 29 n., 50, 147
 Cortesius, Paulus, 30, 147
 Cosimo, 23
 Country life of Vegius, 7
 Court poetry, 17; see Writings
 Criticism, 30 ff.; see Scaliger
 Crotti, Lanzaretto, 18
 Crotti, Luigi, 18
 Culture, 15; education the basis of, 13
 Curia, 10
 Cyprian, 13
 Cyriaco of Ancona, 18

D

d'Adda, G., 18 n.
 Dancing, 157
 Dante, 24
 Dardanus, 156
 d'Asti, Antonio, 5, 18, 146
 Datary, Vegius promoted to, 10
 Date, of editio princeps, v, 29; of final appearance of Thirteenth Book, v, 30; of Scotch translation, 93; see Editions
 Daunus, King, 45, 53
 Davidson, English translation by, 39
 Davies, G. S., 12, 147
 Decembrio, Pier Candido, translator of Appian and Plato, 1, 2; wrote supplement to Aeneid, 2, 19
 Decoration, monochrome, 41
 Decretals, pseudo-Isadorian, 10
De educatione liberorum, 7, 8 n., 13, 27, 145
De felicitate et miseria, 7, 17, 145
 d'Este, Marquis Niccolo, 20
 "dehinc," 58 (l. 83), 153
De perseverantia religionis, 7, 12 n., 27, 145
De rebus antiquis memorabilibus basilicae Sancti Petri, 18, 146
 "De varietate Fortunae," poem by d'Asti, 18
 Dialectic, 9
 Dido, 27

Didot, A. Firmin, 29 n., 147
Diogenes Laertius, 23
Distichs, 22
Donation of Constantine, 10
Donatus, 24, 32

Douglas, Gavin, vi, 26 n., 34; Bishop of Dunkel, 33, 93; date of translation by, 93; earliest publication of, vi, 93; "Proloug," 95-100; Scotch translation by, 30, 33, 38; signature, 100; The XIII Bukes of Eneados, 147

Drances, 46

Du Cange, 153, 154, 156

Dunkel, Bishop of, 33, 93

Du Pin, L. Ellies, 147

Dürer, Albrecht, 41

E

Eagle, Roman, 156

Earliest appearance of Thirteenth Book at end of Aeneid, 1

Editio princeps of the Thirteenth Book, date of, v, 29; facsimile page, 92; four copies, vi, 50; text of, 51, 52; of Virgil, 29, 32

Editions, 29, 30, 36, 38; Brant's, 40; Douglas', 34; of 1471, 49, 50; of 1502, 40, 42; Juntine, of 1537, 47; of 1584, 52-90, fac-ing 50; Liverani's, vi; Milan, 15

Education, 8; treatise on, 13; see De educatione liberorum

Elegies, 9, 18, 145

Ellis, John, 38

Epicurus, 19

Epigrams, by Vegius, 9; books of, 10; source for, 7; see Writings

Epitaphs, by Vegius, 10, 22; Convivium Deorum, 10 n.; Ad Philippum Mariam Anglum Ducem Mediolanensium, see List of works

Erasmus, 32

Eugenius IV, 10, 20

Eulogy, 15

Euridyce, 9

Eusebius, 13

Exercise, physical, in schools, 6

F

Fabricius, Jo. Albertus, 33, 147, 154

Facio, Bartolomeo, 20

Ferrara, 10, 16, 20

Filelfo, Francesco, 14, 30

Florence, 10, 15, 16, 21, 29

Forcellini, 156

Forestus, Joseph, 2

"Fourteeners," 36

Fourteenth Book, 2, 39, 40

Francesca Romana, Saint, 154

Franciscan Revival, 5, 8

Franzoni, A., 147

Fulgentius, 24

Funeral pyre, 46

G

Gallutius, Tarquinius, 32

Geiger, Ludwig, 147

Geography, 5

Georgics, Virgil's, 37, 153, 155, 158 ff.; see Virgilii Opera

Gerini, G. B., 147

Ghilini, Girolamo, 147

Golden Fleece, 22

Googe, Barnabe, 36

Gouget, Abbé Claude-Pierre, 32

Granada, capture of, play edited by Brant, 41

"Great Schism," 5, 20, 21

Greek, and Latin literature, 38; study of, 9

Grimoald, Nicholas, 37

Grüninger, Johann, 42; picture commentary by, 44

Guarino of Verona, 20, 21

Gyraldus, L. G., 30

H

Hagiography, 26

Hallam, Henry, 32

Harris, James Rendell, 4 n., 147

Hebraism, 153

Henry, James, 1, 43, 47, 147

Hermes Trismegistus, 13

Hill, J. B., 39 n.

Hippo, Bishop of, 12

Hippocrates, 155

Homer, 18, 27

Horace, 18, 153; illustrated by Brant, 42

Howard (Hawarde), Henry, Earl of Surrey, 37 n.

Hudibras, 38

Humanists, 16; in Pavia, 18; portraits of, 16

Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, 19

Humphreys, J. Noel, 43
Huntington Library, Henry E., vi; facsimile title-page by, vi, 51
Huss, John, 5
Hypercriticus, 31

I

Iliad, 19
Illustrations, 30, 40, 42, 44, 48; list of, xi; see Brant, and Dürer
"Incunabula Virgiliana," 29 n., 50, 147
infixa radice, 66 (l. 221), 154
Italy, 21, 155

J

Janning, Conrad, 146
Jerome, 13
Joan of Arc, canonization, 8
John II, of Castile, 19
Johnson, Dr. Samuel, 39
Jon, François du (Francis Junius), 34
Jovius, Paulus, 16, 30, 147
Jupiter, 47; see Illustrations
Juvenal, 18

K

Kerver, T., 32 n., 147
Krebs, J. Ph., and Schmalz, J. H., 147, 156

L

Lactantius, 155
Laetus, Pomponius, 33
Lamprière, 39
Landini, Cristoforo, 24, (Landinus) 32
Landriani, Gerardo (Cardinal), 17
Latin, universal language, 33, 38
Latinus, 45, 46, 156, 162, 167
Latium, 26, 28
Laurentum, 44, 45, 46
Lavinia, 28, 46, 47, 154, 157, 162, 167; in illustrations, iii, 46
Leadbeater, Mary, 39
Lemaire, Bibliotheca classica Latina, P.
 Vergilius Maro, 1, 147, 154; last appearance of Thirteenth Book, 1
Leo IV, 14
Lesley, John, Bishop of Ross, 34
Libri XII Aeneidos Supplementum, 145
Life of Saint Monica, 12
Life and work of Vegius, vi; anonymous,
 6; other Lives, 6, 9 n., 146; see da Bisticci,
 Mancini, Minoia, Raffaele

Lindsay, Sir David, 34
Liverani's edition, vi, 148
Lives of the Philosophers, 23
Livy, 2, 4, 156, 157; History, 39
Locher, Jacob, of Ingolstadt, 42; pictures by, 44
Lodi, vi, 5, 10, 15, 17; celebration of fifth centenary, 5
London, 29
Louvain, 19 n.
Lucan, 4, 18, 31, 155
Lucian, 7
Lucretius, 153
Luck, bad, 155, 171; see Omens

M

Mancini, Girolamo, 5, 9 n., 148
Mancinellus, 33
"Manulevatio," 44, in illustration facing 30
Manuscript, of Cicero, 17; earliest, of Vegius, 29
Manuscripts, ancient, 17; Arundel, 49; of Constantinople, 20; illuminated, 41
Manutius, Aldus, 29, 35, 147
Marlowe, 38
Maro, 3, 36; "alter Maro," 5, 30
Marrasius, of Sicily, 19
Marriage of Aeneas and Lavinia, 44, 46
Marsuppini, Carlo, 10, 21, 22
Masures (Masurius), L. des, 38
Martin, E. W., 154, 155, 156
Maximilian I, 42, 45
Medicean scholars, 21, 23
Medievalism, 24
Mehus, L., 148
Menander, 13
Merlini, Dominico, 148
Merrill, W. A., 153
Metamorphoses, of Ovid, 4; see Parallel passages
Metiscus, 45
Meyer, Jacob, 46
Milan, 7, 8, 16, 19, 29
Milton, John, 1, 38
Minoia, Mario, vi, 9 n., 19 n., 148
Modena, 29
Monnier, P., 148
Monica, Saint, 12; chapel dedicated to, 15;
 Vegius buried in chapel of, 15
Monte Cassino, 11
Mouchauld, Pierre de, 38

Munro, H. A. J., 153
Muratori, L. A., 148
Mustard, W. P., 3, 148

N

Naples, 16; literary academy at, 18-19
Narrenschiff (Ship of Fools), 41
Naudé et Patin, 148
Nepos, 23
Niccolo, 23
Nicéron, J. P., 9 n., 14 n., 148
Nicholas V, 11, 14, 20
Nisiely, Udeno, 31 n., 148
Noceto, Pietro di, 11
North, 38
Novavilla, C. S. de, 2
Numicus (or Numicius), River, 48, 53
Nuremburg, 29
Nurse, Vegius', 6

O

Omens, 70 (Il. 312 ff.), 72 (Il. 346 f.), 155, 157
"O socii," 58 (l. 85), 160
Opera Vegii, 15 n.
Ostia, 12
Orpheus, 9
Ovid, 4, 7, 8, 10, 18, 39, 154, 156, 161, 164, 165, 169, 173; Brant's illustrations, 42; Marlowe's translation of, 38

P

Pagan literature, 24
Pagan poets, 15, 16; and painters of Renaissance, 16
Paganism, 24
Painters and sculptors, 16
Palingenius, Marcellus, 36
Palinurus, 28
Pallas, 44
Palmer, H., 33 n., 148
Pancilorus, Hippolitus, 148
Panormitanus, 30
Papacy, return of, to Rome, 11
Papal secretaries, Vegius and Valla, 10
Parallel passages, 158-174
Paris, publications, 29
Parody, 33, 38
"parvo numerosa iuventus," 50
Pastor, L., 148
Pater, Walter, 16, 148

Pavia, 1, 9, 10, 12, 15, 18, 19, 29; University, 18
periocha, 48, 49
Persius, 18
Petrarch, 1, 5, 24, 31
Phaer, Dr. Thomas, vi, 25, 36, 37, 38; translation by, 95-142, 148
Philalethes, 7
Piccolomini, see Aeneas Silvius
Piccolomini, Angelina, 19
Pippo di Gante da Pisa, Isaia di, 12
"plagosus Orbilius," 8
Plato, 18, 25
Pliny, 18, 155
Plutarch, North's, 38
Poems, Virgil's, MS, 19
"poetam haud reuicendum," 19
Poetry, 9, 35; pagan, 11, 16
Politian, 32
Polysyndeton, 50
Pompeiana, 9, 145
Pontanus, Jovianus, 31
Pope Pius II, 8
Porphyry, 13
Priam, King, 47
Printing, art of, 43 n.; Bible before, v; European, 42; invention of, v, 14, 29, 40; 180 editions of Virgil before 1500, v; see Incunabula Virgiliana
Proba, 14
Procopius of Rabenstein, 20
Prologues, 48 f.
"Proloug" by Gavin Douglas, vi
Proloug of the Threttene Buik, The, vi, 35, 95-100
Prose writing, 12, 145
Publication, of Vegius' Thirteenth Book, 29 Puritanism, 24, 25

Q

Quadrio, Severio, 148
Quintus of Smyrna, 31
Quotations from classics, 13

R

Raffaele, Luigi, vi, 9 n., 11, 19, 21 n., 29, 30 n., 49 n., 145, 148
Redgrave, G. R., 40 n.
Religious training, 13
"revomentes," 31, 54 (l. 5), 153
Rho, Antonio da, 19

Robbias, the della, 17
 Roman See, 5
 Rome, 11, 12, 14, 15, 29; founding of, 24, 25
 Rose (Ross), Alexander, 38
 Rosinello, Bernardino, 22
 Rossi, J. B. de, 14 n., 147, 148
 Rue (Ruæus), Charles de la, 31, 32
Rusticalia, 145
 Rutili, 44, 53

S

Sallust, 18
 Sandys, J. E., 24, 148
 Santa Croce, church of, 22
 Saxius, J. A., 2, 9 n., 10 n., 18 n., 149
 Scaliger, J. C., 4, 31, 149, 154, 156, 157
Scheidels Chronik, 45
 Scholars, associates of Vegius, 15
 Scotch translation, vi, 33, 95-142; earliest publication, vi; with "proloug," vi
 Scott, Sir Walter, 33
 Seneca, 18, 154
 Servius, 32
sesqui, 50
 Settignano, Disiderio da, 23
 Shackleton, Richard, 39
 Shepherd story, 7
 Similes, Virgil's, 163
 Statius, 4, 18, 31
 Strassburg, 29, 41, 42, 44, 45
 Style, 30; of French translations, 38; of Phaer and Twyne, 37; of Vegius, 34, 36
 Subiaco, 11, 29
 Suetonius, 18
 Sulpicius Apollinaris, 48
Supplement to the Twelfth Book of the Aeneid, A, 9, 29; see Aeneid and Thirteenth Book
 Sweynheym and Pannartz, 29
 Synzesis, 153, 159

T

Terence, 18; epitomes of plays of, by Sulpicius Apollinaris, 48; illustrated by Brant, 42
 Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid, 34, 39; commentary, 32, 33, 153 ff.; date, 9, 29; earliest MS, 29; editio princeps, v, 29, 50, 51; first publisher, v; flaw in composition, 4; of historical interest, 32; literary form, 4, 24; last appearance of, 1; lines in, 4; original caption, 9; parody, 1; plot, 4; reason for, v, 28, 29; similes in, 4; story of, 2-3; symbolic interpretation, 2; translations, 1, 14, 23, 33, 53, 95; versification, 32; wit, 7

"Threttene Buik of the Eneados, The," 30, 95
 Tiraboschi, G., 149
 Title-page, 43; decoration for, 42; of Twyne and Phaer Virgil, facing 50
 Tornielli, Cavaliere Giorgio, 39
 Translations of Maphæus Vegius' "Thirteenth Book": Burt's, 40; Douglas', 33; English, 40, 51, 53; first metrical, 33; French, 38; in Great Britain, 33; Irish, 39; Italian, 39; Scotch, 95-142; by Traversari, 23; by Twyne and Phaer, 38, 53-91 Translations: of Latin authors, 14, 37
 of MSS, 20
 of Virgil, 36 f.; Davidson's, 39
 Traversari, Ambrogio, 17, 21, 23, 24
 Troia, 44, 45
 Troy, 28
 Turin, 29
 Turnus, 28, 45, 154, 163; illustration, 44; slain, 53
 Twyne, Thomas, M.D., vi, 37, 51, 157; text by, 53
 Types of editio princeps, Roman, vi, 29; opening lines, facing 92

U

University life, 9

V

Valerius Maximus, 18
 Valla, Lorenzo, 5, 9, 11, 19, 30; Biblical scholar, 10; death of, 5; life of, 5 n.
variantque pedes, 82 (l. 535), 157
 Vasari, 16
 Vegius, Bellortus, 6, 7, 9
 Vegius, Caterina Lanterina, 6
 Vegius, Eustace, 7
 Vegius, Laurence, 6, 7
 Vegius, Maphæus: allegorical interpretation, 27; born, 5; buried, 15; contemporaries, 5; criticism of, 32; death, 29; as educationalist, 13; epigram to, 49; family and childhood, 6; heroic poems, 3; as a

- humanist, 17; emitative element, 4; influenced by Donatus and Fulgentius, 24; life of, 5 (see Life and work); meter, 3; Opera, 149; poet and essayist, 5, 6; spirit of verse, 5; style, 3, 30, 31; at Subiaco, 11; Virgil's influence, 4, 5; see "Thirteenth Book"
- Vegius, sisters, Elizabeth and Monica, 7, 12
- Velleris Aurei Libri IV*, 145
- Venus, 47, 48, 53
- Verses, 10, 12
- Vinci, Leonardo da, 6
- Virgil: Aeneas of, 25, 27; books of epigrams in honor of, 21; Eclogues, 24; editions of works, v, 31, 34, 40, 42, 47, 50; illustrated, 40; influence of, 32; magician, v; in Middle Ages, 1; reading from, 7, 8, 18; in Renaissance, 1; spiritual influence, v; Vegius compared to, 31; see Incunabula Virgiliana
- Virgilii Opera*, 149
- Vives, 33
- Vocabolista*, by Vegius, 17
- Voigt, George, 149
- Vossius, Gerardus Johannes, 31
- ## W
- Wadding, Lucas, 8 n., 149
- Wedding, of Aeneas and Lavinia, iii, 46
- Woodcuts, 1; Brant's, 30, 40, 41, 43, 44, 46, 47; supplementary scenes, 44
- Works of Maphaeus Vegius, 3; list of, 145-46
- Writings of Maphaeus Vegius: biographies, 8; books, 12; court poetry, 17; dialogues, 11; elegies, 9, 18; epigrams, source for, 7; epistles, 11; essays, 11; hymns, 11; last, 14; list of, 145-46; liturgies, 11; poetry, 7, 9, 11, 16, 35; psalms, 11
- ## Z
- Zambeccari, Cambio, 19
- "Zodyake of Lyfe," 36
- Zurich, 29

54397

